Eternal Justice, visit with thy frown
Of dread displeasure, and perpetual gloom,
The writer of these words, if they are false,
Or in the least degree distort the truth;
And let that justice come with lightning speed,
To blast a soul, if it has sunk so low,
To tamper with disease or pain and woe.
So here at once he one my God declare,
From all experience, and repeated proofs,
My firm conviction, that disease can be
Almost exterminated from the earth—
That thousands have regained their perfect health,
That seemed inevitably doomed to death.
So that I feel I'm warranted to say,
The Nervous Antidote arrests disease,
And puts a stop to further ravages;
That if the frame is not completely gone,
Restoring all who take to health and joy.
