The Cholera on Board the Emigrant Ships.

After a brief cessation of a few weeks, that fatal enemy of the poor emigrant—cholera—has again made its appearance in our emigrant ships with nearly equal virulence. The packet ship Continent, which arrived from Liverpool on Saturday, lost fifty one of her passengers by cholera. The Hamburg bark John Hermann, arrived yesterday from Hamburg, reports the loss of forty-one by the same disease, and the Mecklenburg bark Prebuslaw, also arrived yesterday from the same port, lost on the voyage her captain and nineteen passengers. The nature of the disease on board the latter vessel is not given, but as both vessels were from the same port, it was doubtless the same as that prevailing on the John Hermann.

The following are the names and ages of those who died on the ship Continent:—

Captain Drummond of the Continent informs us that the disease made its appearance suddenly among his passengers, when about half way across the ocean, and that it raged with such virulence, that in two days it carried off all the persons above enumerated. The disease then left as suddenly as it appeared, leaving the balance of the passengers quite healthy, in which state they arrived in port.

The number of passengers on board the Continent was 492, instead of 792, as erroneously printed, which number would have rendered the ship open to proceeding for carrying more passengers than the law allows. As it was, she had fifty four under the legal quantity.

The committee do not intend adopting any plan for its distribution until they arrive in Washington, and thus avoid conflict with the laws of this State. They expect to be ready to start about the 1st of February, so that we are likely to have a speedy solution of all questions connected with the affair; and we hope it will be alike creditable to the committee and satisfactory to the shareholders. but we scarce could deem it true,
Although we saw upon her cheek
Death's pale and ashy hue;
Her eyes, once purest brilliant,
We e growing dim in death—
The cold sweat stood upon her brow,
And fainter grew her breath.

And when the day god's golden beams
Were moving to the west,
Her gentle spirit took its flight,
To dwell among the blest;
And so she died all calmly,—
With no dark abooding fears
Her gentle spirit winged its way
To Heaven's eternal years.—

Requiescant in pace.

AN APPEAL TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MERCANTILE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

At this peculiar juncture in the affairs of this institution, it is desirable that gentlemen should be selected to fill the various offices, who possess not only ability and integrity but a knowledge of its affairs, and who will cordially co-operate with the trustees of the Clinton Hall association, who, in connection with the merchants of New York, are about to window this institution with a munificent investment of three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. D. F. Appleton, a gentleman of ability and high moral worth, has been nominated by that portion of the members whose love of fun and the excitement of election has led them to nominate a ticket, the nominees of which if elected, will, it is well known, at once place themselves in an antagonistic position to those who are now so strenuously exerting themselves to make this library the first among the literary institutions in the country

Mr. Joseph Black, whose name heads the above ticket was a member of the board of 1851, 1852 and 1853, the most prosperous years the institution has ever known. At present he is the Vice President of the institution, and it is proposed to deprive him of the honor of carrying out those great plans of advancement which for the last year, have been viewed by the citizens of New York with pride and pleasure.

Messrs. Budd, Leffingwell, Wood and others, have long enjoyed the confidence of the members, have administered the affairs of the institution ably and honorably, and we, the undersigned, solicit for the above ticket your earnest support
