on our readers the speeches of the Wall street speculators and money changers at yesterday's meeting in favor of the proposed scheme, and we consider this dose enough to gorge any one. As to Mr. Hatch's trash, why should we rescue it from the oblivion which already covers it? Let him hand over his $100 to some charitable institution at Buffalo, as he says that he is already indebted to us in a like sum for the publication of one of his old harangues. We want none of his money; and should not have noticed his letter had it not illustrated the system on which the advocates of the amendment are proceeding. There are journals in this community to which an offer of $100 ought not to be lightly made; when we see the zeal and activity they are displaying for the cause, we cannot help thinking that they too have had a correspondence with Mr. Israel T. Hatch.

INCREASE IN THE PRICE OF THE HERALD.—If, by the vote that is to be taken this day, the people of New York declare that they are resolved to violate their constitution and to allow the political harpies at Albany to levy an impost of ten millions of dollars upon them, we think it will be settled beyond controversy that they will hereafter stand anything. As soon therefore, as the fact is placed upon record, we shall proceed, in accordance with the advice of many competent and judicious friends, to consider the propriety of raising the price of the NEW YORK HERALD to three cents per copy. When we first started in 1835, we fixed the price of our paper at one cent. It grew and prospered beyond our hopes. Within the year our success was such that we resolved to raise the price to two cents. It still grew and prospered. In another six months or so, we resolved to make a still further alteration and we raised the price again to three cents without increasing its size. The paper did well at this price; but as we found it would be sufficiently remunerative at two, we shortly afterwards returned to our old rates, at which it has remained ever since.

Since that time California and Australia have been opened to emigrants—gold has poured in upon us—banks have multiplied—the price of almost every commodity has risen—the HERALD alone has grown to nearly three times its former size, and contains more than four times its former amount of matter at its old price. The wages of printers, the salaries of clerks, the compensation of editors and reporters, and even the price of paper have all increased. Messrs. Persse & Brooks, who, since we began to publish the HERALD, have received from us upwards of a million of dollars, have grown fat and wealthy, and insist upon an advance. We are compelled to submit, for where could we get a thousand reams of paper a week? Our circulation is enormous; it is in fact only limited by the power of machinery to print the paper. The great bulk of those who read and buy the HERALD would have it at all hazards, even were it to cost them six cents. All the increase we suggest is one cent. And we should not think of proposing even this, if the people of this community fail to manifest their disposition to go ahead in all matters of expenditure, by voting this day to inflict upon themselves and their children a debt of ten millions of dollars to supply the money changers in Wall street with stocks, and the speculators and contractors at Albany with funds to carry on their system of spoils and plunder.

We may therefore say that we have some personal interest in the result of the vote to be taken to-day. This is a strange era in the world's history. Everything seems to be going ahead so fast, that one can hardly overcome a sort of undefined impression that some terrible convulsion lies ahead.

DEATH OF OVID F. JOHNSON—A SAD STORY.—We see it announced in the newspapers that Ovid F. Johnson, formerly Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and a brother, we believe, of the late Governor of that State, died a few days ago. in Washington, a most melancholy death. He had been picked up from the gutter in a state of intoxication and sent to the vagrant department of the work house, where he ended his sad career. Lately he was an active coadjutor with Caravajal, in his illibustering operations along the Rio Grande, and conducted for some time a "manifest destiny" newspaper at Brownsville, in Texas, opposite Matamoras. Attracted to Washington, like thousands of others, by the chances of making money out of his party, he attempted a monthly Democratic Review, the first number of which, full of filibustering odds and ends, was the last. But there, among the fatal temptations of Washington, he remained, a Pennsylvania politician and a Pennsylvania drunkard; and his fate is but the fate of hundreds of others destroyed among the hells and dens of Pennsylvania avenue. Poor Johnson! A man of talents, education and society—a man who might have been the pride of his family and an ornament to his State, carried off by the fast principles of a loose democracy, has perished as a drunken vagrant. What a blessing the Maine Liquor law would be to the city of Washington!

HOW DO THE POLICE LOOK?—They look like a set of idle loafers, lounging about the street corners, with their segars upon their breasts and their absurd little cloth caps on their heads. The unfortunate Chinese of the Tong-Hook-Tung Dramatic Association, distributed along Broadway, handing out advertisements to passengers, or vending segars, have a vocation, and their modesty and diligence are truly commendable; but our police look like loafers hanging around the corners. In London, in Paris, and other places, the police are every where; but they are never in the way of passengers except when necessary. Cannot the Commissioners of our Police contrive some system of discipline for the corps whereby their usefulness may be improved without having them standing continually in the way of everybody? Suppose they try it.

Temperance and Fanaticism—A Slanderer put down.—To the Editors of the N. Y. Express:—A very intemperate and untruthful "temperance man" who calls himself "Teetotaller" assails me with great virulence, but very little discretion, in a communication published in the Express of Wednesday last. His charges are in the first place with disguising or concealing the real nature of my schiedam aromatic schnapps, and with smuggling it in to families under false colors. These are grave accusations, and if the author will disclose his name I will endeavor to teach him, in a court of justice, that libellers who assume the mask of ultra morality for the purpose of assuming private character will not find "the livery of Heaven" a sufficient protection for the malignity that lurks beneath it. In the meantime, hear how a plain tale shall put this slanderer down. So far from disguising the character of my schnapps, I have again and again proclaimed that it was a perfectly pure Holland gin, and nothing else—nay, more, I have published for gratuitous and universal distribution a pamphlet, containing selections from the letters of between three and four thousand of the ablest physicians in America, all referring to it as Holland gin and declaring it to be the very article which they have been vainly attempting for years to procure, as a specific in a host of painful diseases. So much for the charge of "smuggling" the article before the public "under false colors."

"Teetotaller" goes on to say, that in passing through Detroit recently, he saw a copy of a paper called the "Western Temperance Advocate," in which six questions were propounded to me, each of which was a "demolisher," and all of which he "ventures to predict" will remain forever unanswered. Your correspondent verifies the Latin proverb, "Falsus in uno falsus in omnibus." His prophecies are as remote from truth as his manufactured facts. The "six questions" referred to have already been answered by me in the columns of the Detroit Daily Advertiser, though I must confess they were so puerile, inconsequent and contradictory that the game was hardly worth the candle.

Surmising, I suppose, that the aforesaid half dozen queries have effectually crippled me, "Teetotaller," like a bold man, comes at me with six more, intending to give me the coup de grace. I am a patient person, and can stand rignarole pretty well; I will, therefore, "answer a fool according to his folly." The rum and substance of "Teetotaller's" six questions, if indeed there be any substance in them is as follows:

First, how much alcohol does the schnapps contain? 2d. How is the counterfeit to be known from the true article? 3d. May not your (my) agents tamper with the latter, and is not everybody an agent who buys to sell again? 4. Why is all the schnapps consigned to you (me), and the rest of the universe off without? 5th. How much more schnapps is sold here than is made abroad? 6th. How much schnapps will make a sot sober?

These questions are almost too stupid for serious notice; but being, as I said, a patient man, I will answer them categorically. 1st. The schnapps is pure alcohol, flavored with the finest preparation of juniper. 2d. By purchasing of my appointed agents the buyer will be sure of obtaining the genuine article. 3d. My agents are tradesmen of the first respectability, and not swindlers; and merely buying to sell again does not constitute a man my agent. 4th and 5th. These questions involve an idiotic contradiction. First, "Teetotaller" asks why the universe is not supplied as well as the United States, and then insinuates that the entire consignments are inadequate to the supply of this market and are doled out with spurious liquor. I forgive the dirty malignity of the insinuation for the sake of the ludicrous manner in which the libeller has stultified himself. 6th. I never said that drinking aromatic schnapps would sober an inebriated man, but simply that being the purest and most healthful form of alcohol, it did not produce that morbid and unusual thirst for stimulants which the more fiery and pungent liquors were apt to create.

"Teetotaller" winds up his logical epistle with the hope that a law will be passed utterly prohibiting the sale of liquor, either as a medicine or as a beverage. This "out Herod's Herod." There is no reasoning with such a fanatic. I have in my possession nearly three thousand letters from the medical men of the United States, all declaring—genuine dissentients—that liquor and the very liquor at hand, is invaluable and, in fact indispensable, for the cure of many maladies, and as a restorative in cases of debility arising from age and other causes. But "Teetotaller" knows better than the collective medical science of America and of the world! "Behold a Daniel come to judgment again, I say a Daniel!" "Teetotaller" congratulates himself that the passage of the Maine law at Albany, this winter, will effectually put down the sale of the schiedam aromatic schnapps. Heaven, my malignant friend. In Massachusetts and other States of New England, where the Maine law is in force, the article is sold by many of the town agents, as the purest and best liquor that can be obtained for "medicinal and manufacturing purposes." It is proposed to appoint commissioners in this State to test the purity of the liquor to be sold by the officials appointed under its law, and "Teetotaller" will discover, whenever the analysis shall take place, that my schiedam aromatic schnapps is just what I claim it to be—the purest Holland gin ever made; and by examining my pamphlet he will find the first physicians in the Union testifying over their own signatures, that pure Holland gin is the most desirable of all liquors for persons laboring under diseases which require the exhibition of alcoholic stimulants.

Remarkable Disinterestedness!!

ALBANY STREET AND TRINITY CHURCH.

I have had my attention called to a memorial in the Journal of Commerce of the 9th inst., in which the memorialist magnanimously proposes to give ten thousand dollars to defray the expenses of removing the ashes of the dead in the line of the proposed extension of Albany street, "to relieve the public, and the proprietors and residents of the locality, from the disadvantage to which they appear to be subjected by your memorialist accidentally possessing property in the neighborhood!"

It has been shown, from the report of a sworn surveyor, that the expense will be nearer $50,000, without the cost of a new cemetery and vaults, probably as much more; so that instead of the whole cost, Mr. Boorman's $10,000 will scarcely pay one-tenth of the expense of such removal. He excludes, too, in his proposal, the monument now erecting, commenced before the present law existed—and upon what principle of known justice? the officers of Trinity church began this gratuitous work on their own ground. Had they not a right to do so? Is this the only monument they have made over the gallant dead? Was the stone that honors the dauntless Lawrence put up to prevent the opening of a street? The truth is, Mr. Boorman can well afford to pay $10,000 for such a purpose. It will prove a profitable investment, for it will enhance the value of his "accidental property in the neighborhood," (accidentally given him by Trinity Church at a more sour) $100,000 or $200,000—a clever operation that; one that will do credit to the astuteness that has already amassed a gigantic fortune, and whose possessor cries out against overshadowing corporations so dangerous, as though there was not as much danger to be apprehended from a wealthy individual as from a wealthy corporation that spends its funds in charity. For my part, I had rather confide in a body of men, administering a trust, responsible to their constituents, than to an irresponsible individual, wielding his enormous power with the compactness and energy of a single will and purpose. Despotism is usually exercised by the individual, not the many. Trinity Vestry can be dismissed from office if they abuse their trust. Therefore they can have no motive of action but the advance of Christian order. Mr. Boorman holds his office for life, and very naturally looks to his own interest from "accidentally possessing property in the neighborhood."

In conclusion, I wish to ask Mr. Boorman a question. Have you a some secluded resting place for your dead, where those whose memory is dear to you are safe from ruthless invasion? What is your price for allowing their dust to be shovelled up, and carted off, to be thrown promiscuously into one pit? For what a farce to talk about "descendants and friends, of persons whose remains have been interred there" identifying their ashes where all are "blent" together for "thirty feet" in depth. Shame on those who, in "their haste to be rich" would take the shortest path, though they trampled on the dead! Eternal shame! on him, who to rear higher his temple of Mammon, would build his scaffold of human bones!!

Mr. Arcularius has Resigned.—The town will be surprised to learn this morning that the much abused Commissioner of Streets and Lamps has resigned his office. One Thousand Dollars Reward.—The Lilliputian King stolen.—Such was an advertisement we began yesterday, when it was announced that time was up for the commencement of the afternoon's levee, for the young gentleman was no where to be found. It appears that he thought he required a longer nap in the daytime than was usually allowed him; so, after eating dinner he quietly gave his attendant the slip, and, springing over the brim of Major Stevens' hat, which was lying on the hall table, he sailed himself away, covering his body entirely with his handkerchief and was seen travelling with old Morpheus at the greatest rate of railroad speed. When the alarm was given the Major rushed for his hat, and, as he raised it up, out dropped Scott, who, when he heard the cause of the fuss, thought he had been the hero of a capital joke.
