To the Citizens of Pennsylvania.—Incorrect statements, circulated through the newspaper press, can only be effectually answered through the same public medium; and, although it has been said that it Falsehood has a day's start, Truth, booted and spurred, can never overtake her, I shall at least make an effort to head off a report which, either through ignorance or a worse motive, has been circulated to my disadvantage.

It has been asserted by several journals that my object in establishing a depot for the sale of the Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps in Philadelphia, was to escape the penalties of the Prohibitory Liquor bill, then pending in the Legislature of this State. This is a gross misrepresentation. I require no refuge from the operations of that measure. It protects me in my business, and I can continue to bottle and sell it under its provisions. A clause in the first section of the act enables me to take the article from under custom house lock, store it in my own warehouse, and put it up in bottles for the purpose of sending it beyond the limits of the State. Under another clause, exempting patent medicines, of which one of the components is alcohol, from the restrictions of the law, I claim the right to sell the Schnapps within the State, for medicinal purposes. It has been pronounced an indispensable remedy in a variety of diseases, by four thousand of the first physicians in the United States; it is prescribed and administered as a restorative, diuretic and stomachic, wherever the Maine law is in force; and it is, in every sense of the word, as much a medicine as any of the fashionable which have alcohol for their basis, and, like the Schiedam Schnapps, are kept by druggists as part and parcel of their legitimate stock in trade.

So much for the false report that my new depot in Philadelphia was intended as a dernier resort, in case the New York Liquor bill should pass. In any event I shall continue to make this city the centre of my business.

My leading object in locating a branch establishment in Philadelphia, was the convenience of Southern and Western merchants, who, by receiving their supplies from that point will effect a considerable saving in freight and other charges, besides having the advantage of obtaining the article by a more direct and speedy route than if despatched from this city.

The Maine law is no bugbear to me. The Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps is not offered to the public as an ordinary tavern beverage, but as a medicinal diet drink, manufactured from the best and soundest barley procurable in Europe, and medicated with the purest preparations of juniper that science has yet produced. The State agents for the sale of liquor throughout New England keep the article, and temperance practitioners prescribe it as a specific in dropsy, gravel, affections of the kidneys, dyspepsia, hypochondria, general debility, and many other complaints. It is, therefore, altogether distinct, both as regards its properties, purity, and the purposes for which it is recommended, from every other alcoholic stimulant.

The time is, I am convinced, approaching when no other preparation of alcohol will be tolerated by the medical faculty. Its claims to the confidence of the profession and the sick are unequalled. Throughout the whole process of manufacture, shipment, bottling and packing, it is under the supervision of the proprietor or his confidential agents. From the grain and the berry to the bottled and boxed up article, it passes into no second hands, and adulteration is therefore impossible—and this cannot be said of any other liquor in the world.

So far from having any reason for withdrawing the Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps from the restrictive operation of the Maine law, it is from the Maine law States that I have received the highest encomiums on its curative tendencies, and should the circle of prohibition comprise the entire Union, the consumption of the article, instead of being diminished, would be enormously increased. Every day the public are becoming more sensible of the baneful effects of adulterated liquors, and I venture to predict that within a very few years they will be as completely expelled from medical practice by the concurrent decision of the faculty, as from common use by prohibitory statutes.

In opening a warehouse for the sale of the Schnapps in the State of Pennsylvania I consider it due to myself that my motives should be appreciated and understood. I have been represented by certain unscrupulous presses as a sort of fugitive from the Maine law in this State. These prints have endeavored to convey the impression that my position here would be no longer tenable under the new act, and that I was therefore glad to seek shelter in Pennsylvania, in anticipation of the coming storm. On this point I desire to place myself right with the citizens of Pennsylvania, and I trust this explanation of the facts will effectually silence the calumnies of which I complain.

Spring.—In a few days more overcoats will be at a discount, and delicate colors, light fabrics, white jackets and fish poles, shilling shad and fresh laid eggs will become the order of the day. If there is anything that communicates delectable sensations to a man, it is that period when the blue birds begin to make love among the apple blossoms, and the mud swallows plaster the barn eaves with their cozy nests. To the ladies this season is also fraught with interest, for then they doff the attire that winter rendered necessary, and emerge in all the graceful tissues of the drapery of summer. Then, too, thick soled boots are discarded, and the feet are encased in dainty coverings of kid and satin and morocco. And speaking of the feet—and ladies' feet, too—reminds us that Mr. CANTRELL, the beau ideal of a ladies' shoemaker, has provided at his old stand, 336 Bowery, the same ever rich and tasteful stock of ladies' and children's shoes with which he always greets the advent of spring, and which he solicits the ladies to come and examine. We hope they will. The ladies are generally awake to their interest, and Mr. Cantrell's twelve shilling gaiters are certainly unequalled by any other in the city. We consider him the acknowledged head of his profession, and such we believe every one will who gives him an opportunity to manifest his skill.
