American Politics.

Live Oak Club No. 6 held its sixth meeting last evening, at their club room in Florence Hotel, corner of Broadway and Walker street. The President, Dr. H. B. Kirkham, took the chair at eight o'clock. The proceedings of the last meeting were read and approved. The President said that before the invited speakers commenced, he had a few words to say. George Law, gentleman of the club, will, in my humble opinion, get the nomination of the American party at Philadelphia on Washington's birthday, and then your club will have double duty to perform. I have to announce that Mr. Barker, the late President of the Grand National Council, was expected to address you this evening, but I met him in the street and he informed me that illness would prevent his being with us. He handed me the following letter to read to you to-night, and said that he fully endorsed its sentiments. The following is the letter alluded to, which was read to the club by President Kirkham, accompanied by some complimentary remarks in reference to the vast service rendered to the American party by Brother Barker. Nine cheers were given for Mr. Barker.

FREDONIA, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1856.

HON. JAMES W. BARKER, President Live Oak Club No. 1—

SIR—You circular, setting forth the sentiments and plans of your patriotic Order in relation to the approaching campaign for the election of President of the United States, came to hand yesterday. After a careful perusal, I beg leave to say that its suggestions meet my hearty concurrence. We have had enough of epaulettes on cowards' shoulders "poked" into the White House; enough of pettifogging briefmakers, with their technical evasions and sophisms in legal phrase and unlawful effect. What we want now is practical Law, in simple purity, truth and dignity. The office has filled men too long; we therefore want a man to fill the office—a man who can inspire the confidence of his friends and command the respect of his foes. George Law is that man, and with proper prudence and industry his election will be certain. Having been in portions of six States within the last two months, I have found the potency of his name pervading all ranks, like "heaven in the lump," and thus, not in noisy babbling, but in tones so low as to be unmistakably prophetic of an unwavering firmness of purpose which no obstacles can resist. May the club, as its name indicates, prove the strongest and most enduring, and be wielded by hands unwavering and skilful, with hearts that never faint. Very respectfully your obedient servant,

F. A. REDINGTON.

The President then said—We have some good speakers on hand to-night. I have now the pleasure of introducing to you Mr. Jones, who will favor us with a few pertinent remarks. Mr. Jones said—Mr. President and gentlemen of Live Oak Club No. 6—Permit me on this auspicious occasion to call your attention to the direct duty which lies before you. The selection of a candidate for the chief magistracy is the most delicate and the most difficult duty of a political party. A candidate must represent the principles of the party supporting him, and be free from any such alliances or relations with other organizations and interests as would impair the confidence which it is requisite the masses of his supporters should entertain in his fidelity. His personal character must be distinguished by such qualities of capacity, integrity, firmness and justice as will command the general respect and confidence of his countrymen. He must also be endowed with the generous faith in republicanism, and the holy zeal for the perpetuity and advancement of freedom, which alone can arouse and enchain the popular sympathy. He must have in his life a history which can be appealed to in vindication of his title to public confidence and to the distinction of being selected as a leader and a ruler. To select such a man from the talent, experience, integrity and enterprise of this country, requires the exercise of just discrimination, impartial judgment and patriotic disinterestedness. But I do not intend to oppose the nomination of any candidate, nor to assail the views of any class or portion of the great American family. I, as the advocate of George Law, endeavor to show why I deem him the best fitted for our standard bearer, and possessing the highest qualifications for a President of the United States, of any man now living. Let us present to the acceptance of our countrymen a new man—new only to the prominent positions in the public service—but ripe in all knowledge of the public history of our country and the world, intimately acquainted with every interest of the country, unequalled in the varied experience and practical wisdom which direct and animate all true statesmanship, and thoroughly imbued with the republican spirit and popular sympathies which give constant stability and augmented success to our free system. Such a man, pre eminently is George Law. He never held an office. His independence is not shackled by obligations to any circle of wearied supporters, nor has he any treasured magazine of vengeance to wreak upon traditional opponents. His patriotism is as broad as his field of enterprise, embracing the whole land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and every American interest in every portion of the globe. It is a grievous fallacity to teach that a ruler should be educated and trained in the closet or the forum. George Law's education has been practical, but most thorough. The closet statesman studies the speculations of learned men on theories of legislation, and on the relations of governments with industrial interests in which they have no participation. George Law has mastered the field of scientific speculation, and tested the value of theories, by originating and conducting the enterprises upon which they are founded, and successfully elaborating the relations of business to which they are intended to apply. Closet statesmen construct systems of laws to apply to material interests which they do not comprehend. George Law, by his sagacious management of material interests, and his comprehensive knowledge of their relations, is qualified to adapt the action of government to the public wants with almost unerring success. A precious school of statesmanship, is that, whose chief professor cannot even preserve the existence of a party around them! Where is the democratic party? Dwindled to a disjointed mass of belligerent factions. Where is the whig party? It has passed into history. And yet, some of the pilots saved alive from these hapless wrecks, are offered to us, to guide the helm of the American party! But I only intended to refer to these things to illustrate the fallacy of a peculiar education in statesmanship. A statesman most certainly must be fitly educated, or his career will end in disappointment. But let us have an education that produces results, that inspires confidence, that qualifies for action. What are the lessons of the past on the subject of training rulers is a routine of state experience? It is true, we have no exact parallel to our own case to refer to. No free government like our own has ever existed, except on a limited scale, and in countries comparatively uncivilized. There is little instruction for us to be gained from the history of the statesmanship of Europe for hundreds of years. Oppressed people, plundered treasuries, family rivalries, causeless and fruitless wars, make up the records. But who have left the impress of their minds upon the institutions of their respective countries and the history of the world? Look at Oliver Cromwell. Had England ever a ruler like him? Yet his life was spent in obscurity, and in the quiet pursuits of private business, till the exigencies of the revolution called him to command. Peter the Great practiced mechanical labor with his own hands, as the best preparation for the wonderful improvements he meditated in his barbarous empire. Frederick of Prussia, who founded and established a monarchy, was a rude and unlettered man. Napoleon the First passed almost immediately from the public schools to the command of armies, and with hasty strides to the rule of an empire. These are instances of great genius assuming the lead in the affairs of men, as well by the force of its own superior power as by the accident of position. Who now, by the common judgment of mankind, stands at the head of European statesmanship? A man whose life, before his accession to power, was spent in obscure exile or in prison. What a school of preparation for the duties of government! Cincinnatus, the great dictator of Rome, was repeatedly summoned from the humblest avocations to the exercise of supreme power in times of public difficulty and distress. This distinction was a tribute to his moderation and integrity, and his wisdom and success justified the choice of his countrymen. Look to the two most revered and distinguished names in our own history—Washington and Franklin. There is a striking similitude in the character and history of these great men, previous to their entering public life, with the position, at this time, of Mr. Law. They had devoted themselves with great industry and with eminent success to the pursuits of private business. They had established for themselves characters commanding the respect of the whole country for sagacity and integrity. We may appeal for illustration of the arguments to the whole history of our revolutionary age. Were ever the councils of any nation adorned by a higher display of the great qualities which in rulers commanded reverence and admiration? Were ever the debates of statesmen discharged with such comprehensive wisdom and such magnificent success? Let the history of our progress and our happiness as a people present the answer. I would like to dwell for a little while on the character and career and the intellectual qualifications of Mr. Law—believing, as I sincerely do, that the success of the American party is only to be assured by his nomination, and that, if elected, his administration will form the most glorious epoch in the history of the republic. I wish that I might set him before the public as he is known to his friends. I would speak of the integrity of his character, so prominent in all his intercourse, so emblazoned in the front of his dealings with men, as to humble and abash the very face of fraud, and drive it shrinking from his presence. I would speak of his inflexible justice, upon which the humblest laborer always relies with unclouded faith, and which neither the seductions of wealth nor of power can swerve from its strict balance. I would speak of his calm self-reliance, never effected by threat or flattery, by the smiles or shadows of adversity. I would speak of his wisdom and sagacity, his unique and almost boundless—information, consistently illustrated by almost unerring judgment in public as well as in private affairs. Mr. Law is known to his countrymen as the conductor of great enterprises, of improvement and commercial expansion. In these pursuits it is known that he has acquired a fortune of millions. Yet his name has never been connected with any speculative scheme—his wealth has never been swelled by any operation which did not at the same time advance the general prosperity. Usefulness has always been the test applied to every undertaking which has obtained his sanction and his sympathy. By labor and by skill he reared his fortune and built up his fame. By the unaided labor of his own hands he laid the foundation of his fortune, and by the skilful combinations which his great intelligence enable him to effect, he has magnified it, and place himself in his present high and influential position. For many years Mr. Law has identified interests equal to those of a State. In the management of those great affairs his admirable powers and his large grasp of intellect have been brought into active, though not exhausting exercise. He has manifested his great capacity to guide and to command. As President of the United States, if the country shall be so fortunate as to secure his services in that high station, he will conduct affairs with such firmness, integrity and justice, and with such wise providence for the advancement of the great interests of the republic, that, before the splendor of our progress during his administration, the imbecility, pusillanimity, and corruption of the last few years will sink into final forgetfulness.

Several other speakers followed, and the club adjourned at 11 o'clock.

THE OHIO KNOW NOTHINGS AND THE PRESIDENCY.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Feb. 8, 1856.

TO JAMES GORDON BENNETT, ESQ.,

EDITOR OF NEW YORK HERALD:—

DEAR SIR—Since I last wrote to you concerning the affairs of the American Order in this State, the canvass of the proper man for nomination at Philadelphia has been going on in all parts of the State. The delegates from Ohio will be instructed to go for a new man, and not for one who is or has been identified with either of the old political parties. They will not vote for Fillmore, as they do not consider it policy or honesty to try and engraft the old whig party upon the American Order. They see clearly that it would be death to the new party. I have procured with some difficulty a copy of some resolutions which passed Council No. — and which I sent you, begging you will suppress the name. I am opposed to making use of the American party to engraft upon it any dead and defunct political party, or party hack, and therefore I approve of the Council's proceedings from the end of the longest hair on my head to the extremest ends of the nails upon my little toes. Ohio goes for a new man. The Buckeye State don't care a cures whether it's George Law, the stevedore and bricklayer, or Jack Smith, the blacksmith; the President that will get her vote must be a worker and a man. Yours, ever,

NEHEMIAH STRONG.

A copy of these proceedings was sent to each delegate elected or to be elected from Ohio, as well as to the alternates.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Feb. 1, 1856.

Resolved, That this Council, No. — do solemnly, and as if in the sight and presence of Almighty God, recommend kindly and respectfully to the delegates of the American party from this State at Philadelphia to pursue the following course:—

First, Should an unwise and short sighted policy prevail in that convention, and should a majority of the delegates see fit to postpone the nomination to a later day, then do we, this Council, recommend the Ohio delegates to try and alleviate the mischief and ruin which will follow from such a cowardly proceeding to the great American party, by assembling with any other delegates, no matter how small the minority, in a proper place, and then and there uniting upon some new name, and making a nomination; appealing to God, the State councils, the subordinate councils of each State, and the great mass of honest American people outside of the organization, to ratify such a proceeding, and to elect the candidate so selected. We are satisfied that if the American National convention adjourn without a nomination, that our party will become the bye-word and laughing stock of the whole Union, and that no convention of our party can ever be called together again, but that we shall be disbanded and broken up before July next.

Second, That should the convention at Philadelphia be false to the principles of the organization, and to the deep-rooted feelings of the hearts of the honest and good of both political parties that those old parties and their leaders were rotten, corrupt and unworthy of anport, which led to the formation of a new American party, based on new hopes and new issues, and proceed to nominate Millard Fillmore, Martin Van Buren, Wm. H. Seward, Sam Houston, or any other prominent name long identified with either of the old parties and their issues, then we recommend the Ohio delegates to stand firm to the principles of our party and to resist the action of a majority, shake off the old dust; and if there should not be more than ten true men, to proceed, even with that small minority, to nominate a new man from our ranks, and leave the result to Almighty God, the State councils, the subordinate councils of each State, and the great masses of the American people, in and outside of the American organization.

Third, That the Ohio delegates be recommended humbly but firmly by this council to insist, from first to last, upon the nomination of George Law, of New York, or some other man from the private ranks of life, as the candidate of the party; and if such a man cannot be found in the American ranks, to represent our new party, but it should be thought desirable to select a leading whig or leading democrat, then we recommend our delegates to withdraw from a treacherous gang who, worse than Benedict Arnold, would betray a great and struggling party, and place the command of it in the hands of our enemies, be true to their trust, and nominate by a minority a new man who shall possess practical business knowledge, sound sense, firmness of purpose, good judgment, a nice sense of justice, which will enable him to preside over the destinies of the confederacy of States for the next four years with dignified ability. And after having made such a nomination, let the minority delegates go home, leaving the result to Almighty God, the State councils, the subordinate councils of each State, and the great mass of the American people in and outside of the organization, with confidence that such a combination of divine favor and physical force will ensure the election of their choice, and give us an American victory that will rejoice the American world.
