SATAN, a gentleman with whom we are all so familiar as to render further introduction unnecessary—his first appearance this season in everyday costume ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
MONSIEUR CENTIME, a stock broker who frequents the Bourse for pastime, perfectly at fall in the mystery of the Bulls and Bears, and up to the rise and fall in Brazilians and Africans ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
CHEVALIER D'ECARTE, a young man about town, well versed in the game of Ecarte, blessed with a natural gift for prestigitation and all the black arts generally, and who will infallibly name every eleventh card the moment he sees it, without any assistance from Adrien ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
MADAME CLARICE, a gushing and romantic female with an eye for the picturesque, who finds traps in running brooks, figures of speech in stones, and ecstatic similitudes in everything ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
JOHN SMITH, Jr., a person whose name is familiar in our mouths as household words, and whose residence is designated with geographical and numerical accuracy, and with a frequency that is absolutely alarming in insets, and are indigenous to every large every authentic city directory (for further particulars see Trow, 1862-63) ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
SERGEANT OF POLICE, one of those excrescences which hang about municipal governments, the peculiar aversion of all honest people tainted with distributive ideas in regard to property, personal and otherwise, or in any way tinctured with the belief in agrarian philosophy ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
MONSIEUR RODOLPHE, Principal of the Academy for the education of usurers, a person of liberal turn of mind when his mind is turned toward himself, who never does anything under one hundred per cent, and who has an iron hand which promises one hundred and fifty ..... Miss LAURA KEENE

GENEVIEVE, a popular actress, and of course an angel in disguise, not to say a number of disguises, which—well, as she makes the explanation herself during the course of the drama, the mention of the matter would simply be an anti-climax, and therefore we leave it entirely in her hands ..... Miss LAURA KEENE
APOLLO, a gentleman of great celebrity and unique reputation, but who has of late become so accomplished in the matter of shirt buttons; money the root of all evil; a long story hurriedly told; a strong minded female; off to Paris.
