MATRIMONIAL.—IN TAKING THIS (PRONOUNCED by some improper) step, the gentleman, an American, would cower between thirty and forty, considers it burlesque to speak as fully of himself as an advertisement will permit, not only as a proof of sincerity, but that those wishing to respond may understand as nearly as possible whether or not an acquaintance would be agreeable. A Union man, with a full share of sound sense and judgment, agreeable and prepossessing in manners, domestic and affectionate in nature, fond of a devoted wife, with whom his aim would ever be to make home the most sacred and happy place on earth; a lover of innocent pleasures, but abhors false display; admires domestic happiness, rational enjoyment and solid comfort with those friends who can appreciate for course, and not for wealth or show; detests liquor, is acc and vice in any form, and will not countenance it in others; believes that husband and wife should live as helpmates to each other, and not as convenience; believes in the Protestant religion, and does not approve of interfering with any one's religion, but for every one to enjoy his own views; is not an "old Betty," but of liberal views, and holds to every one enjoying himself when he can; believes a good name of more value than gold; is possessed of some means, and wishes to make the acquaintance of a lady of some means also, who whose views will coincide with the above. The advertiser is not unmindful of the opinion many form of a versification of this kind, but as this is inserted in good faith, hopes it may be looked upon as an exception, and that no true lady will respond unless prompted by the most holy intentions, stating as fully of herself as consistent with brevity, under the circumstances, which no one need have any delicacy in doing, as the confidence will be held inviolate and letters returned, if desired; besides, correct names need not be given until through a correspondence the lady has become convinced that her confidence has not been misplaced and that an acquaintance would be agreeable. At an interview, references of the highest character will be given. As this is inserted with the most sacred intention, no one, even of the most refined taste and sensitive nature, need hesitate in responding, as the advertiser claims to know what belongs to the true gentleman maintaining a high sense of honor and respectability, and ladies, even of the highest respectability and standing, need not fear being compromised in answering to this address prior to June 25. H. R. WESTERLY, New York city.
