McCLELLAN'S OPERATIONS.

the following regiments:—Seventh Maine, Ninth and Eighteenth Massachusetts; Tenth, Twenty-fifth and Forty-third New York; Eighth, Ninth and Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania; First Pennsylvania rifles, First and Fourth Michigan. The only officer in the lot was a barefooted, barefooted Dutch Yankee, Lieutenant E. Eichelberger, of the Eighth Pennsylvania, who was captured by some means in the vicinity of Seven Pines yesterday morning.

SERIOUSLY WOUNDED.

We regret to learn that John M. Daniel, Esq., editor of the Richmond Examiner, who was acting as aid to General A. P. Hill, had his right arm shattered by a ball in the battle yesterday.

THE RICHMOND BATTERIES.

Major Marmaduke Johnson's battery and the Purcell battery, both of this city, distinguished themselves in the fight yesterday. The former was complimented on the field by Gen. Hill.

THE CITY YESTERDAY.

We doubt if any community in the world ever exhibited more composure under similar circumstances than was exhibited by the people of Richmond yesterday while the battle was progressing near the city, the result of which was to determine whether they were to be slaves or freemen. No excitement was visible anywhere. Men, women and children, except those who were ministering to the wounded soldiers were engaged in their daily pursuits or promenading the streets as usual. No levity was observed, but each countenance betokened a calm reliance on the favor of God, the justice of our cause and the valor of our troops. This stoical equanimity is a characteristic of the Richmond people which has often been regarded by strangers as a sort of secretary phenomenon. It should be cultivated as a preventative of panics to which all communities are subject, who have suffered themselves to be afflicted by sensational excitements. In the afternoon groups were collected at some of the corners of main streets, anxious to hear the latest reports from the battle field, and about the hospitals when the wounded were brought in, there were similar gatherings. Apart from these incidents there was nothing to indicate that the "great battle" for the right of self government was pending within a half hour's ride of the city. There was one other variation from the general aspect of the streets which deserves a passing notice it was the absence from the sidewalks of the tinselled "officers" and absentees from camp. The latter had returned to the post of duty, with the exception perhaps of a few who, together with the gold braid gents, had secluded themselves from observation by remaining within doors until dark. The people of Richmond acted well yesterday, and should—as we doubt not they will—maintain their philosophical composure.

THE WAR NEWS IN THE CITY.

Tremendous Excitement of the People—Morning: Defeat—Afternoon: Victory—Scene at the Herald Office, City Hall and Hotels, &c., &c.

Another of those tremendous sensations to which the people of this city are so subject since the commencement of this unhappy rebellion occurred yesterday. Every one retired to bed Wednesday evening in buoyant spirits, jubilant over the good news from McClellan's army, and confident that the next intelligence that would be received would announce the triumphal entry of the Union army into Richmond. Another story, however, was to be told Thursday morning. The newsboys were flying everywhere through the city, shouting out extras, containing the announcement of a defeat or retreat of General McClellan. Disappointment sat on every brow. Blank looks, thoughtful countenances and significant shakings of the head prevailed to an alarming extent, and it was very evident that the news had produced anything but a favorable impression. People scanned the newsboys suspiciously, but resolutely purchased the extras, determined to learn the worst, and terminate the fearful suspense as soon as possible. After having devoured every line, it was curious to note the disappointed and excited manner in which the papers were folded up and jammed into breeches pockets, with a crushing energy indicative of the wish that the rebellion could only be smashed in an equally facile and summary method. But how rapid and wonderful are the transitions from joy to sorrow and from sorrow to joy!

The morning was all gloom and sadness. The afternoon was bright with hope and victory. About three o'clock news of a pleasing character flashed over the telegraph wires from Washington and almost instantly the city was in a ferment of enthusiasm. The excitements equalled if it did not surpass all previous excitement since the war broke out. At the hour before mentioned the joyious news arrived that General McClellan had, after hard fighting, been victorious, having beaten the rebels badly. Such news, on the eve of the eighty-sixth anniversary of American independence, was not to be by any means disrelished by a people loving the government of the United States and the splendid institutions which that government is now engaged in preserving on a firmer basis than they ever were before. Large groups of persons might be seen on the corners throughout the city eagerly discussing the news. The various hotels—those concentric establishments around which circulate so many persons of political eminence, were in a perfect storm of excitement. Opinions were freely offered at these places in regard to the veracity or otherwise of the intelligence received, and the minority of graduates from the school of skeptics were bound to yield to the majority from the temple of Demos in the unanimous opinion that McClellan had overmastered rebellion and proved himself a strategist in the Napoleonic sense of the term.

The news penetrated the City Hall soon after it reached our office, and produced quite a furor amongst the officials therein engaged. Pens were flung down, books closed, and a general suspension of municipal business took place. Cheers were given in rapid succession for McClellan and his invincible army, and bets were freely offered that he would occupy Richmond in the course of twenty-four hours.

Barroom discussions were rife throughout the afternoon, and the proprietors did a big business on the strength of the news.

THE SCENE AT THE HERALD OFFICE.

As soon as the bulletin of "Good News" was posted on the board outside the HERALD office an immense crowd of people was almost simultaneously summoned to the spot. Thicker and thicker grew the mass of anxious people, until it was impossible for a quarter of them to gain sight of the pleasing transcript. One individual, with the lungs of a Stentor, ventured to act as telegraphic medium to the multitude, and read aloud the following words:—

"GOOD NEWS FROM GEN. McCLELLAN!
THE REBELS BADLY BEATEN.
ONLY ONE GUN LOST."

This produced a talismanic influence on those assembled, and a big cheer rang out with a resonance sufficient to send its echo through the city, and rouse its people to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. Then began the anxious questions and the quick, excited replies:—"McClellan is a brick," said one. "I always had confidence in little Mac," echoed another. "Only one gun lost," observed an antiquated looking individual, with a strong Southern cast of countenance; "that's strange." "Hurrah for the Irish Brigade," shouted a huge Celt, with broad shoulders and a general dash of true manhood in his personal appearance." And thus went on the peculiar expressions of feeling, which grew in fervor as the passers by stopped and augmented the gathering.

The effect produced by that few words above quoted was really electric. No superficial feeling was manifested; but the genuine, deep and trusty expression of a government-sustaining people was strikingly apparent.

The crowd lingered around the office the whole afternoon and evening, as if anxious to hear further news. Confidence was expressed on every countenance, and several uttered their sanguine belief that McClellan would be in Richmond on the Fourth of July.

THE EXCITEMENT AT THE NAVY YARD, BROOKLYN.

The news of General McClellan's retreat created quite a sensation at this naval station yesterday morning. Officers, blue jackets, marines and operatives could be seen congregated in small knots, eagerly reading the news from copies of the EXTRA HERALD, some of whom denounced, in the most furious terms, the administration for not reinforcing the ablest and bravest general who ever had command of an army, others crying down the political huckstering of the stockjobbers in Congress, and upholding Honest Old Abe, while others were damning Buchanan for not taking proper steps to prevent the evacuation of Fort Sumter. Others again contended that there was some mistake—that McClellan would never sanction any retreat. One gentleman here asserted that, as the news appeared in the HERALD, it had the appearance of truth, but for once he was disposed to believe that the proprietor was bamboozled, and that before the day was over we would hear of a different state of things altogether. It was all bosh, and he would bet five to one that when we heard from McClellan we would find that he never spiked a gun. McClellan was the right man in the right place and he had every confidence in his ability, with even great odds against him, to whip the damned rebels, and overcome all the political woolly heads of the North. Another gentleman said there was no reason for panic, whether the news was true or not. There were men and means enough in the North to conquer, and conquer we must. He insisted that, as to-morrow was the anniversary of our independence, we should not give way to any despondency but boldly assert, as though rebellion did not exist, that we are a free nation, and entitled to the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Such was the excitement all day, until the arrival of General McClellan's despatch to the War Department, which appeared in the columns of our paper, and which was eagerly purchased at almost any price asked. Each man, as he devoured the despatch, ran off rapidly to his comrades to tell the news. Hither and thither men could be seen running with faces all beaming all over with delight, and when the news was thoroughly known a shout of joy was sent up from the different departments which would rival the thunder of many of our big guns.
