MATRIMONIAL.—ROMANCE MAY REVEL AND LOVE play the devil," but I must not give up the trend of similes that is, of meeting a good and congenial companion for life. Such an one as:—

Thou dearest, lovely wight of Nance,
Short since we've met, 'tis true;
Yet I can't shun the golden chance
Of making love to you.

Although I've met with many a lass
Towards whom my "heart" could glow,
Yet not to one of them I said
Aught of love—yes or no.

In my early days I loved but one:
Her like they were but few;
I little thought, when she was gone,
Such love I'd feel anew.

But now for you I must confess
I feel the same deep flame:
And I must beg of "God" to bless
"You," all the wealth I claim.

Should you but honor this loud heard
With welcome kind and pure,
Oh! "joy" and I would never part,
Or this if I were sure.
