DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATIVE ADDRESS.

The Old Rotten Regency Spoilsmen Again at Work.

An Insolent Appeal for Popular Support Upon False Pretences.

COPPERHEAD DEMOCRACY RUN MAD, &c., &c., &c.

The democratic members of the Senate and Assembly of New York, on coming to the close of their legislative labors, desire to address their constituencies on the subjects of public interest, which at this time engage alike the attention of the people and their representatives.

The session of the Assembly opened in a protracted struggle, and the House was finally organized under circumstances that left a deep impression upon its character and upon the conduct of legislation. One of the members from Kings county, elected as a democrat by a constituency largely of that political character, was induced to abandon his party, and accept the Speakership of the House, at the hands of his opponents, under circumstances involving a gross betrayal of party faith, and personal dishonor. He received from leading politicians of the republican party the sum of one thousand two hundred dollars, under circumstances leaving no doubt that it was obtained upon the following draft:—

$1,200. ALBANY, January 15, 1863.
To ISAAC SHERMAN, Esq., Treasurer, Hanover square, N. Y.:—
Pay to the order of Hamilton Harris, Esq., twelve hundred dollars. R. H. LOW, Chairman.
BEN. FIELD, Secretary.
Endorsed—Ham. Harris, Thurlow Weed.
Written across the face of the draft is the following:—"Paid Jan. 28, 1863."

This draft is signed by the Chairman and Secretary of the Republican State Committee, and is drawn upon the treasurer of the committee, and is made payable to and endorsed by a member of the executive committee of that organization by whom the $1,200 was paid to Mr. Callicot.

To expose this transaction, and the responsibility of the parties to it, was the main object of the struggle of the democratic members before its consummation in the election of Speaker; and the effort was repeatedly renewed during the session; while to conceal it and to suppress evidence in regard to it was the aim of the republicans. The charges made before the House against the Speaker embraced a wider range of culpability; but the inquiry was restricted by the decision of a partisan committee, which arbitrarily excluded evidence and ignored the positive presumptions of guilt; and when in the end the proof was brought home to the parties charged, the majority of the House, aided by a course of unparliamentary tactics, summarily cut off the discussion and decision of the question, and interposed in a body to screen the accused from punishment. In thus assuming his defence they took upon themselves the responsibility of his misconduct and its consequences. If there has been much that has been lost in the legislative action of the present session the responsibility for it is to be traced to its ill omened opening. The corrupt bargain gave to the republicans the Speaker, a working majority in the House and the organization of the committees, while they already had control of the Senate. We do not propose to review these measures or do more than indicate their general characteristics, which were disregard of the obligations of the constitution, State and federal, indifference to the personal rights and franchises of citizens, and absence of sound economy. Upon no question had the will of the people been more clearly expressed in the election of 1862 than in condemnation of the system of arbitrary arrests of citizens of the loyal States by the federal authorities. The injustice of these arrests had been made so apparent as the folly of the politicians at Washington, who, in a crisis like the present, chose to set the example of disobedience to the law and indifference to their oaths of office. Yet when the democrats of the Assembly proposed an inquiry into these outrages, in the following resolution, they were voted down by the unanimous voice of the republicans, the Speaker changing his vote to produce the result.

Whereas, Several citizens of the State of New York, have, since the 1st day of July, 1861, been arrested without process of law, and imprisoned without warrant, within the limits of this State; and

Whereas, Many others have been so arrested and taken, not only without authority of law, but in violation of the statutes, beyond the limits of the States; and

Whereas, It is represented that public officers of this State have aided in such arrests and imprisonment and deportation, and that the public prisons of this State have been used for the confinement of such prisoners so illegally held; and

Whereas, It is also represented that certain judges of this State, having jurisdiction, have, in violation of the statutes, refused, on application, to issue writs of habeas corpus, therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to inquire into all of the above matters, and that the said committee have authority to send for and examine persons and papers; and that said committee be directed to report to the House, in writing, with all convenient speed, together with the evidence taken therein.

Fearful of the results of an inquiry, which would have revealed on the part of the administration at Washington an extent of outrage and disregard of law of which the public have as yet a most imperfect idea, the majority arrayed themselves in a body against it and succeeded in suppressing it.

We leave to the judgment of the people the excess of partisan spirit which could induce their elected representatives to such disregard of the liberties of our citizens.

This surrender of the rights of the State and of the citizens, at the dictation of party, was again manifested in the passage of the law authorizing the creation and indefinite multiplication of United States banks within the jurisdiction of the State—a measure to which Congress had added the unjust feature of an exemption from State taxation while imposing a heavy federal tax upon the State institutions. Upon few questions had the sentiment of the people of this State been so repeatedly and emphatically expressed as upon this of the want of power in Congress to incorporate banks. The firm course of President Jackson, in hostility to such an assumption, not less than his fearless defence of the Union against the evil genius of nullification, constitutes a large part of his claim to the gratitude and affectionate remembrance of the American people.

No public necessity growing out of the national disorders, no exigency of the war, justified the introduction of this measure into Congress, or its adoption here. It was the act of a partisan minority, who, getting into office through the distractions of the democracy, and raising the occasion of civil war, reversed the well known judgment of the people and the traditional policy of the government, and conspired to accumulate into their own hands, and set in for purposes of political ambition a huge consolidated central power.

The people of this State enjoy now a system of banking which, with some imperfections, has the merit of imposing personal responsibility upon the banker, and securing guarantees of the solvency of the circulating notes in the hands of the community. This attempt of the federal government to break down this system and substitute a crude experimental scheme of its own indicates a rashness and assumption difficult to realize if it had not been attended with other multiplying evidences of administrative incapacity. But that the Senate and Assembly of the State should volunteer to become accomplices in this usurpation and outrage would be altogether incredible if it were not found recorded in the journals of the two houses by the votes of the republican majority.

This subordination of the rights and interests of the State to the schemes of the consolidationists at Washington was renewed and less painfully in the reluctance to provide for the military defense of the State and the refusal to perfect the organization of the militia, while the federal government, at the same time, proposes to substitute a forced conscription for the old reliance of the republic, a citizen militia and a volunteer army!

The citizens of New York may well look back with pride at the combination of civil energy and military power unfolded by the State in the crisis of the civil war. The contributions of men and money were unconstrained and wholly voluntary; and, yet the State placed in the field, at the service of the federal government, over two hundred and twenty thousand men. No independent State, of a population of four millions, ever displayed more warlike energy; and yet, should occasion call for it, the result would show that the military resources of the State, so far from being exhausted, are ample to meet any further crisis of public danger.

Perhaps no more conclusive testimony can be given of the spirit which this and the other loyal States of the North displayed, and of the extent of the resources which they placed in the hands of the federal government, than the language of the Congressional Committee on the conduct of the War—a committee whose extreme character and views give additional emphasis to their admissions:—

"The administration called by the people to the head of the government, in this the most critical period of the nation's history, was more promptly and fully supported than that of any other government of which history has preserved any record. The call of the President for men and men had been more than complied with; the legislation which he had deemed necessary had been decreed by Congress, and the people had acted nobly and generously supported and sustained what their representatives had promised in their name. The same Congress, fresh from their constituents, had again met, and there could be no doubt that as they had before acted so would they continue to act. It needs but to refer to the history of the Congress just closed, its prompt and thorough action, clothing the executive with the fullest power, placing at his disposal all the resources of men and money which this nation possessed, to prove that your committee judged rightly that Congress needed no prompting from them to do its entire duty. What upon whom devolved it was to provide the means necessary to put down the rebellion, but upon those whose duty it was to rightfully apply those means, and disregards they employed for that purpose, rests the blame, if any that the hopes of the nation have not been realized, and its expectations have been so long disappointed.

"The acknowledgments have made to Congress are, in truth, mainly due to the Union, which have, thus far, by appeals to the patriotism of their citizens, raised and organized the vast armies which have been placed at the disposal of the federal government, and which have been used with so little effect.

"Despite these evidences of spontaneous patriotism and public spirit, the federal government refuses any longer to rely upon the will and exertions of the States, and asking, under its assumed and legislative authority, thereof, power to absorb their functions, and to organize an army by force of conscription, throwing money alone left, and attempting the vain application of the principles of the compulsory service system of a paternal government. Against a measure so incongruous to the genius of our institutions, so different from the policy of the past, so little in accordance with the spirit of the present, and so fraught with the dangers to the future, we protest.

"We protest against it as a violation of the rights of the States, and of the liberties of the people, as a measure of doubtful constitutionality, and of questionable necessity, as a measure which, if it be not in itself a violation of the constitution, yet, in its operation, will so change the relations of the States to the federal government, and so change the character of the government itself, as to be a violation of the constitution, and a subversion of the rights and liberties of the people. We protest against it
