TO THE PUBLIC.—NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1863.—The Journal of Commerce, in an editorial this morning, states that in consequence of shortness of help they are unable to do justice to their readers or advertisers, and asserts that they have always paid the highest wages to printers. The man who could have written such a glaring tissue of falsehoods in the face and eyes of an intelligent public, must have been he, who, with vulgar pomposity, stated that, having made his "pile," he could defy combinations. To prove the untruthfulness of his statements it is only necessary to compare the prices paid by the four leading papers of the city, which have been thirty-five cents per one thousand "ems," whereas the price paid by the Journal has not for twenty-five years exceeded thirty-two cents, and has been down to twenty-eight cents, besides keeping men waiting for hours without remuneration.

ODE TO GOURAUD.

"GOURAUD! to my rough skin, this Soap of thine,
Comes like a calm upon the mid-sea brine;
Fraught with a power its angriness to soothe—
Making it mirror-like, and clear, and smooth!
As Nature love the foam in which they lave
Their beauteous limbs—so I delight to bathe
And revel in the latter's ample scope,
Produced by thy superb Italian Soap!"

The effect produced upon the skin by using Dr. GOURAUD'S far-famed Italian Medicated Soap (for removing tan, freckles, sallowness, sunburn, &c.,) was described by a French lady, to her friend, in the following words:—"Madame, by using this soap, on devient absolument amoureux de soimeme!" The skin, by its use, does gradually appear as if it were converted into the whitest marble of Italy, the cuticle assumes a sort of glittering, phosphorescent brightness—resembling very much white opjects which, having been thrown overboard in calm weather, within the tropics, seem to blanch and corruscate as they sink into the depths of the ocean. Many of our readers have doubtless witnessed the phenomenon, and can attest to the extraordinary and beautiful effect produced thereby. GOURAUD'S Poudres Subtiles will positively, and without any reservation, exirpate, root and branch, every vestige of superfluous human hair to which they may be applied. Cheeks "sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought," may have a permanent bloom imparted to them as delicate as the peach blossom, or deep as the moss rose, by GOURAUD'S magnificent Liquid Vegetable Rouge.

Found at Dr. FELIX GOURAUD'S,
(new establishment),
No. 455 Broadway, below Grand street.
