THE ALLAIRE WILL CASE.

Conclusion of the Trial—Argument of Counsel—Charge of Judge Davis—The Case Left to the Jury—A Sealed Verdict to be Rendered This Morning.

SUPREME COURT CHAMBERS—PART III.

Before Judge Davis.

OCT. 4.—Frances Roe and Others vs. Cecilia T. Allaire.—The contest before a jury in this case was concluded yesterday. The leading points in the testimony have already been published in the HERALD. This morning James T. Brady, on the part of plaintiffs, summed up in a lengthy and eloquent argument. He commenced by remarking that he was certain every gentleman on the jury felt a strong interest in the case. It addressed itself to our humanity, to our hearts, to our souls, as well as to our intelligence. He saw upon the jury gentlemen younger than himself—gentlemen who had attained the same age as himself. All of them recognized the solemn circumstance of death. Webster said that a man might live as a conqueror or a king, but he might die only as a man. He (Mr. Brady) knew Mr. Allaire. He knew him as a young man knows an older one. He was a very intelligent mechanic, and no question was made as to his capacity. America had grown proud of her mechanism, and we read in the London Times articles in which high praise was given to this country in that connection. Counsel felt a pleasure in bearing testimony to the abilities of Mr. Allaire. He could not say anything unpleasant of him in the presence of his blind daughter and his second wife with her son standing within hearing. It would not be decent for him to utter anything against the lady. Mr. Allaire died at the age of seventy-two years, giving to that blind daughter only $100. That was the whole case. In one sense that was all of the case. He (Mr. Brady) would ask the jury whether that was the act of a father exercising his own will and knowing that the heart beat in his bosom which the Almighty filled with love. What had Mrs. Roe done that her father had given additional blindness to her nature? Her blindness was no pain like that imposed upon her by the acts of this woman. She (Mrs. Allaire) had made her husband blind to the interests of his children; but the jury would let in the daylight to her darkened senses and send Mrs. Roe out of court that day with a new light. He (Mr. Brady) would confess that he felt a good deal about the case. He was not much of an actor, but he was a little of a man. He claimed that this will was executed without the formalities of law, and if it had been executed undue influence was exercised to procure it. The name of the testator should be subscribed to the instrument at the end of the document. It should be witnessed by two persons. The proposition of plaintiffs was that the other side had failed to establish the fact that the will had been executed in accordance with the statute. Mr. Brady here went on to criticise the evidence of Hart, one of the alleged witnesses to the will, and then conceded that this second wife, this stepmother, had a perfect right to employ kindness, attention, the grand eloquence of a woman's presence, and all the immense power which a woman exercises over man, in a fair way, to obtain suitable provision for herself and her boy. He would admit that. But there was a different state of affairs in the case at issue. What had Mrs. Roe done to Mrs. Allaire that the latter should exercise her influence so as to have a blind child dismissed by her father with $100. It was true friendship did not exist so strongly between women as between men. Women had kind hearts until the world trampled upon them and crushed them out. If Cecilia had the natural, just, religious sentiments of a good woman she could not have permitted Mr. Allaire to make such a will, to the exclusion of his two sons and two daughters. These sons and daughters stood there that day to ask the jury to proclaim that such a will was not the act of their father. Counsel then passed to a discussion of the nature of the affection which existed between Mr. Allaire and his children, charging his second wife with causing an estrangement in this connection. It had been charged that his children had deserted Mr. Allaire, but such was not the case. It was also charged that they would not approach him in the hours of his adversity when sickness troubled him, and that Miss Cecilia Pompkins—afterwards his second wife—was the only one upon whom he could rely for attention after the death of the first Mrs. Allaire. The evidence produced upon the trial would contradict these assertions. In his hours of sickness could he not call upon Mrs. Roe, whom he loved with a tender affection? Why, he loved her above all others of his children. Mr. Brady continued in this strain to argue the impossibility of Mr. Allaire making a will cutting off the children of his first wife with one hundred dollars each unless undue influence had been exercised by his second wife, and concluded with an eloquent appeal to the jury to take into consideration the rights of his clients and their undoubted claims in the contest.

Ex-surrogate Bradford followed in behalf of Mrs. Allaire, cautioning the jury against allowing their sympathies to carry them away while in the discharge of their duty. There were certain duties which they owed to society. If they should dispose of Mr. Allaire's property as he did not wish to dispose of it himself there would be an end to all justice and all safety, and there would be no need of the testamentary law. When the case was first tried before the Surrogate an effort was made to disprove the handwriting of the testator; an effort was also made to prove that in 1856 a certain will and deeds were executed. These efforts proved to be ineffectual. Mr. Bradford then went into the details of the evidence produced in the case, arguing that no proof had been put in to show the exercise of any undue influence on the part of Mrs. Allaire, and contending that the testimony in regard to the legal execution of the will was full and complete.

Judge Davis then charged the jury. He said the case for their consideration was a very important one, not alone to the parties themselves but as to the nature of the questions and the amount involved. The General Term of the Supreme Court had sent down five questions which it became the duty of the jury to answer. There were two main questions to be tried—first, as to the execution of the will, and second, as to the alleged undue influence. The law had been conceded by counsel for the parties opposing the will that every man, being of sound mind, has a perfect right to make such a disposition of his property as pleases him-self, with certain limitations, which were of no importance in this case. Unless there could be proved some undue influence or incapacity the law would not interfere with the will in any sense. In this case it appears that Mr. James P. Allaire, in the year 1850, was a man of vigorous bodily health. No attack was made as to his powers of mind or physical condition. At that time he made an instrument propounded in court as his last will and testament. The first question to be determined was as to proper execution. The law prescribed certain formalities and the statute pointed them out distinctly, although it was not deemed necessary to carry them out literally; only the substantial compliance was necessary. In the case at issue, the will having been prepared, it was claimed on the part of the persons propounding it that it was subscribed in the presence of two witnesses. The first was Mr. Halsey, who was dead. The son of this gentleman was called, who proved the signature, so that there was no controversy on this head. The son also testified that the entire body of the instrument, except the signature, was in the handwriting of his father. Halsey being therefore deceased and his handwriting having been proved, it followed as a law presumption that in respect to him the execution of the will was proper and regular. The first question asked for the jury to decide was whether the paper was signed by James P. Allaire in the presence of all the subscribing witnesses thereto, and if not, whether the same was signed in the presence of any of them, and if so, which of them? Judge Davis then went on to detail upon the nature of the evidence introduced upon both sides, directing the jury as to their duties in the case under the law, and calling their attention to the forcible points of the testimony. He directed the jury to bring in a sealed verdict this morning.

NATIONAL EXPRESS AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Trouble Among the Shareholders—Alleged Fraud in the Management of the Company, &c., &c.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Judge Sutherland.

SEPT. 28.—Orlando W. Jotyn vs. The National Express and Transportation Company.—Plaintiff in this suit is a shareholder to the amount of $5,000 in the company, which is here made to defend. The complaint goes on to state that in October, 1865, certain persons claiming to be commissioners applied to plaintiff to subscribe to the stock of the National Express Company, which was organized under a special act of the Legislature of Virginia, with a capital of $5,000,000. Under the representations of these persons plaintiff purchased five hundred shares. He subsequently ascertained, as he alleges, that the company was not a corpation properly organized, and that his money was expended for other uses than the benefit of the company. In November, 1865, the company started business, having changed its title to that of the National Express and Transportation Company, of which General Joseph E. Johnston was elected President. Plaintiff further alleges that the company have not complied with the provisions of the act of incorporation, for organized under its charter so as to exempt shareholders from individual responsibility. At the time of purchasing stock he had no knowledge of the falsity of the representations, and has since been informed of their untruth. The company represent that they cannot carry on business under their present capital, and have made an assessment upon plaintiff as a shareholder. It is claimed that the entire control of the company is exercised by persons in Maryland and Virginia, who have administered its affairs unjustly, mismanaged its business and squandered its money. That one B. F. Fechlin has exclusive control of the company, applying its means to his own advantage; that the company has made an unfair contract with him; that they are in debt and have had to borrow money; the property of the company is scattered all over the country, and has been attached at several places, and that a further continuance of business will result in the loss of all the money already invested. The Legislature of Virginia, under which this company was organized, is claimed to have been an unauthorized body; that the directors of the company intend that the Northern stockholders shall bear all the burden, and that the moneys shall pass into the hands of Southern stockholders; that proceedings have been instituted in Virginia to dissolve and wind up the company, and that the majority of the stockholders are in favor of such a course. Plaintiff demands $5,000, the amount paid into the company, and asked for an injunction restraining the company from transferring their property, from levying any assessment on plaintiff and from proceeding with the Fechlin contracts. This injunction was granted, and the case came up yesterday on a motion to modify or dissolve the injunction.

Mr. John E. Burrill appeared for the plaintiff, and Messrs. Roger A. Pryor, R. S. Guernsey and G. F. Lowery for defendants.

The grounds taken by defendants were:—That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that it appears by the complaint that the plaintiff is not a stockholder; that he is not a creditor in law, because he has not obtained a judgment against the corporation for for his alleged claim; that this Court has not jurisdiction in this action to grant the final relief upon the facts which the complaint sets forth and demands judgment for; to declare the defendant (which is a foreign corporation) insolvent, and ask this Court to appoint a receiver and to "wind up" its affairs; to declare that defendant is not a corporation, for the reason that the Legislature of Virginia, from whom it obtained its charter, was not a legislative body, legally organized or convened, and had no authority to create such corporation, or to restrain the acts of his defendant or its officers in a foreign state, in which it appears to have been created, for the reason that the same is now mismanaged and insolvent and could not profitably conduct any further business.

Judge Sutherland took the papers and reserved his decision.

AN ATTORNEY SUES FOR COMPENSATION.

Marine Court.

Hosford vs. Chappell.—The plaintiff in this case brought an action to recover compensation for services rendered in conducting a suit brought against the defendant by Mr. Blaige Lorriard, also for giving advice with reference to the sale of the steamer Ruby. As to the first particular, it is claimed by the defence that the services were neglected and unskilfully performed. With reference to the steamer, it is claimed that the case was never tried, but settled, with other matters, in May last. The trial will be continued to day. For plaintiff, S. Hosford; for defence, Waterman, Wilday & Patterson.

ASSAULT BY A CAPTAIN ON A SAILOR.

Before Judge Hearne and a Jury.

James Holland vs. Captain Louis F. Timmerman.—The plaintiff was a waiter on board the steamship North America and the defendant captain of the steamer. On the 15th of September, while the vessel was at sea, the defendant ordered the plaintiff to stand his watch, which he had refused to do. The captain, after endeavoring to persuade the plaintiff to perform his duty, punished the plaintiff sufficiently to compel his obedience without injuring him. The plaintiff claimed $1,000, as damage for cruel and inhuman treatment. The defendant admitted that the plaintiff was severely punished, but claimed that he had the right to compel him to do his duty if he could do so without injury to plaintiff. The jury remained out for some time, but were unable to agree upon a verdict.
