PARATIONS FOR THANKSGIVING.

t Weather, Well Filled Stores and Plenty Customers—A Specimen "shopping" Party—Buying a Turkey—Anticipations of the Morrow.

as long been an unsettled question, and it will bly ever remain one, whether pleasure itself e anticipation of pleasure is the most product- of enjoyment. No better illustration of this rtainty could be found than in the popular ment of a popular holiday—such a one, for nce, as that which will spread gladness and ting all over this wide land to-morrow. It s but a walk through any of our streets to-day nvince one that the day before the holiday is east to some fully as much an occasion of cting as the holiday itself. From nine o'clock in morning till midnight every store that in the materials of good cheer will be rded with eager purchasers, whose faces, shed in smiles, will betray the joyous d into which the prospect of a good time on the ng happy morrow has thrown them. What a y it is to stealthily follow in the track of one of commissariat excursions and quietly listen to conversation and watch the wanderings of ever curious and, alas that one should have to ever covetous eyes! On ordinary occasions, of se, shopping even for a Sunday dinner is a suf- ntly exciting pastime, but it is generally en- d by only one member of the family at a time. At ons of peculiar and momentous importance, ever—such an occasion as Thanksgiving—half delicious interest of expenditure would be if one were forced to enjoy it alone. The whole ly, therefore, start out together—the mater ssas, the eldest daughter (who is now as tall as parent), the younger one (who is wondering n she will be promoted to wear long dresses), the two boys, who are for this special occasion allowed to absent themselves from school. aps, indeed, if the excursion be deferred evening, even the head of the family also become a constituent member of little army that thus marches boldly forth to ck the stores and rifle them of their treasures ing the piper, however, of course by leav- behind them as they retire a due and proper unt of compensation in the shape of greenbacks fractional currency. Fully equipped with two or e baskets the party stroll leisurely along the ave- nearest to their home or at once take the car and ry down to Fulton or Washington Market. The serious business to be disposed of is, of course, purchase of the turkey. And what thousands tens of thousands of turkeys seem to meet the as they at last fairly enter the market! Some these unfortunate victims of the season, as you easily guess, are by no means profitable in- tments; tough and ancient and lean, they will d all the eloquence of the dealer to get them off hands, even at a ridiculously low figure. Great , therefore, is called for in selecting bird whose appetizing form will adorn centre of the table, the proper garniture of ich forms the special object of the present jour- . Strolling between the strings of yellow flesh shining feet that line the way every bird is cely scanned, and such as have the luck to seem ecially tempting are in addition inspected by ch. Perhaps, indeed, quite early in the search identical article sought will be discovered. By lingering of mater familias' fingers about the r turkey's corpse the dealer will know that she n intending customer.

"Fine turkey, ma'am; the best in the market, d only thirty cents a pound; you can't do better d you may do a good deal worse."

Whereupon ensues a long and certainly a very racious description as to the ruling rate of turkey at. Of course the dealer had seen from the outset at he had no chance of making a sale unless he rew into the commerce a pleasant suspicion of being a bargain. He has therefore asked several nts a pound more than he intends to timately accept, and pretends with all his might d main to be in earnest. Materfamilias thinks the rd is scarcely as fat as she would like to have one, d as to the price, "why, Mrs. Jones bought one sterday for five cents a pound less."

Yesterday, perhaps, she did; but she couldn't to- y. Why, ma'am, you have no idea how scarce rkeys are going to be in the market before night. ey are running up in price every minute."

"More likely to have them left over to spoil. Most very one that I know has bought their turkeys ready, and every one else that I don't know as ell, I've no doubt."

After a while the turkey salesman begins to weak- n. He hints a possible reduction of a couple of nts, and finally the bargain is arranged, and the rkey, unconscious of its change of owners, is sale- transferred to the basket. Then follows a sort of neral rafflle upon all the stores that fall in the ne of march, special regard being always given to vings to eat and drink, though attention is y no means exclusively confined to them. Many a me has materfamilias said in the past, and many time will she say in the future, when upbraided with the liberal, not to say extravagant, cost of the ousekeeping, "You've no idea of the thousands of hings that you've got to buy to keep a good, plain able; and you never could know until you tried it yourself." The said aphorism has generally been greeted with a quiet smile of incredulity, but who would question its truth after he had followed a grand shopping campaign, such as the one in question, and noted the many stores from which contributions were levied to be deposited in the basket? But even the labors of Hercules were finished at last, and so are even the purchasing preparations for a Thanksgiving Day. Then comes the return home, and the spreading out again of the spoils that have been captured. "What a fine turkey!" cover one shouts again in simultaneous chorus. "How much did the man say he weighed, ma?" And so cheap, too!" If, too, there should be luckily any such pleasant trifles as raisins or sugar, or even cloves in the mountain of acquired treasures, there is naturally on the part of the juveniles a good deal of begging, and perhaps also an occasional gleam of Tammany genius in the way of a steal.

He must, indeed, be an unsympathetic man who can forbear a ramble through the streets when they are thus brightened with cheerful, hopeful faces. The stores themselves, even, seem inspired by the spirit of the time, and their overflowing abundance of good things seems somehow to suggest irresistably a reduction as to the use to which they will be put. Good cheer is, indeed, a part of the ritual of Thanksgiving, and serves as a symbol of the joy which the members of a family feel in their reunion. Let us all hope that the bright weather and lively streets and cheerful faces that we are now enjoying are a truthful augury of a happy Thanksgiving.

SINGULAR PROCEEDING OF A NEW YORK LAWYER.

Charges of Swindling and Bigamy—A Hard Case.

[From the Rochester Union, Nov. 20.]

A case of alleged swindling and bigamy at Fairport is reported in the Democrat this morning. The party said to be the victims are the widow and daughter of the late Dr. Van Buren, a long time resident and highly esteemed citizen of that village. The facts as stated by our contemporary are probably correct, and we copy as follows:—

We have learned the following facts in a case of deep laid and successful villany, of which a lady and her daughter, residents of the village of Fairport are the victims. The facts (and we obtained them from a responsible source) are these:—Not long since there died in the village named an esteemed physician, Dr. Van Buren. He left a widow and an only child, a daughter. He was possessed of property valued at $30,000, which his will directed to be divided equally between his widow and his child. The latter was, and still is, a young girl whose charms had matured with something of the rapidity of womanhood in less chilly climes than our own. Although but fourteen years of age, she looked a glowing beauty of seventeen. According to the provisions of the will the mother was appointed guardian of the daughter. The former was left free to dispose of her own moiety of the estate, and, wishing to sell the homestead, she caused a prominent lawyer of this city to insert in the daily journals an advertisement to that effect. This notice appeared in the Democrat and Chronicle till within a very recent period.

In the meantime, and soon after the Doctor's death, Mrs. Van Buren received a sympathizing letter from a lawyer in New York city named Beebe. He had formerly been a school teacher at Fairport, and became slightly acquainted with the family. He had—so ran the epistle—never forgotten the Van Burens, and now felt for the widow and her child in their great misfortune. Mrs. Van Buren was touched by the kindness shown in the letter and replied at as early a moment as grief would permit. Naturally a correspondence so begun was kept up. The letters on both sides gradually changed in tone, and finally the lawyer proposed that Mrs. Van Buren should become Mrs. Beebe. There was no apparent reason why this event should not occur. The lawyer was at least forty years of age, and if the widow was older the difference was not so great as to give cause for remark. Mrs. Van Buren accepted and Beebe made a trip to Fairport, where the ceremony was to take place. The lawyer arrived, but whether it was that the lady had faded since he saw her years before or that the fresher charms of the daughter at once made an impression on him, he declined to fulfil the engagement. Strange to say, no quarrel ensued. Beebe's assurance and plausibility enabled him to smooth the matter over. Furthermore, he persuaded the mother to allow him to be appointed guardian of the daughter in her stead. He immediately laid siege to the daughter's affections, or rather excited her girlish imagination by promising to support her in style at New York. He had the entree to good society, and her life would be one of luxury and splendor. So successful were these representations that soon he induced her to come to this city, where they were married. The widow was kept in ignorance of this proceeding, and the daughter returned to Fairport, no one being the wiser for her trip with Beebe to Rochester. The latter, while he was thus making sure of the daughter, had not forgotten the mother, but by various artful insinuations succeeded in getting a deed from her of her share of the property. This was the more easily accomplished as the lady is of a flighty, eccentric disposition. He then returned to New York, and for a few weeks matters remained in this state. Mrs. Van Buren, however, in some misunderstanding that occurred between herself and her daughter was informed by the latter of her marriage. Soon after a telegram came from Beebe at New York. He was dangerously sick, and wanted both mother and daughter to hasten to his bedside. They went and found him apparently very ill. He induced them to remain at the metropolis, sent the mother to a boarding place of his own selection and placed the young lady in a convent school to be educated, taking care, however, to instruct the superior of the institution not to allow any one to see her without a written order from him. Having thus disposed of both he hastened to Fairport, and, being possessed of complete control of the property left by Dr. Van Buren, proceeded to sell the homestead, furniture, pictures, not even excepting the family Bible. So quietly and expeditiously was all this done that even Mrs. Van Buren's attorney here, who was advertising the place for sale, so far from receiving any knowledge of what was going on, only learned of the transaction less than a week ago. Even if he had known he would have been unable to interfere. Beebe returned to New York probably the best satisfied man who ever journeyed to that city of rascally lawyers. (It is well known that out of the sixteen hundred more or less who practice in that city not one-sixteenth are competent, and, still less, honest.) Mrs. Van Buren had a brother-in-law, and to him she had once or twice before written, asking him to see her on business; for it seems that even she, simple and confiding as she was, had at times suspected that all was not right. The brother-in-law finally came to New York, saw his relative and had an interview with Beebe, who contrived to quiet his anxious surmises, and he returned satisfied. Shortly after this Mrs. Van Buren's attorney here had occasion to serve some notices on the daughter, but the latter was not to be found. The brother-in-law was informed of the circumstance, and made a second journey to the metropolis. He looked at once for Beebe, but that astute scoundrel had taken the alarm, and he also was missing. Mrs. Van Buren had not been informed where her daughter had been sent, and here for a few days all further developments stopped. By accident a lady who was acquainted with mother and daughter saw the latter on the street, and at once brought her to her relatives. The brother-in-law pushed his investigations with renewed activity, and soon discovered that Beebe had a wife and three children in New York when he married Miss Van Buren in Rochester. The wife was still living and was in complete ignorance of the villany of her husband.

The above is not a sensational story, but, we have excellent authority for saying, true in every essential particular. The friends of the victims have given the case into the hands of an able lawyer in New York city, and an attempt will be made to track and arrest Beebe.

Inquiry has enabled us to learn something further in relation to this matter. Beebe was formerly a law student with the late Judge Chapin in this city, and afterwards taught school at Fairport, when he became acquainted with the Van Burens. It was nearly a year ago when he took the guardianship of the girl. There was a feeling at Fairport strongly adverse to Mrs. Van Buren, and it was contended that she was not a suitable person to manage the estate and have the guardianship of the daughter. The estate was valued at $40,000, and the persons who had become bondsmen for Mrs. Van Buren were not satisfied, and it was for this reason that the management of this estate and the guardianship were put into the hands of Beebe. If he had any wrong intentions he was certainly favored in his designs by the circumstances which conspired to take the authority over the estate from the widow.

The attorney referred to in this city was Mr. John McConvill, who had only specific duties to perform. He remitted when he had occasion to Beebe, who had the management of the estate. It is several months since Mr. McConvill has seen any of the parties, and has not been in a way to know much of their affairs.

We find no positive evidence of the marrying of Beebe to Miss Van Buren, nor can we learn that he has actually absented himself. It is best to hold the bigamy feature of the case in reserve until authenticated.
