AN OHIO TRAGEDY.

A Negro Man Murders His Wife and Shoots Himself in Springfield.

[From the Springfield (Ohio) Republican, Feb. 15.]

Living between Centre and Market streets, in the extreme southern portion of the city, is a quarter which has been known for years by the title of "Africa," from the fact that it is inhabited almost exclusively by colored people, some of whom (but by no means all) are among the lowest elements of our population. This place was, on last (Wednesday) night, the scene of as bloody and terrible a tragedy as ever occurred within the limits of this grime-cursed city. The name of the murderer and would-be suicide is Robert W. Scott; the victim was his wife, Caroline Scott, and the deed was committed in the most cold-blooded and deliberate manner, and with due premeditation. If anything was lacking to show this, the following copy of a paper found upon the person of Scott after the murder would prove the fact beyond a doubt:—

FEBRUARY 14, 1872.

I have this day decided to have my wife or die and go to hell. I will not be put off by her. She bought a revolver to take my life. I thought I would give her a chance to do so. I want to see if she will do so to-night. It is Caline's time to die or mine, but I think it is both of our times to die. They tell me that is hard. I do it for I like too.

I, ROBERT W. SCOTT.

The writer was upon the spot in a short time after the murder, and from persons present, neighbors of the parties, and in some cases eye-witnesses of the act, gathered the following detailed statement regarding the shocking affair:—Scott and his wife had been married seven years, but he did not care for his family as a man should, doing little for their support a great part of the time. Some time in June last, as near as could be told, they separated, and, although the husband had more than once made overtures for a settlement of difficulties and for a reunion, the wife steadfastly refused, as she said, "to live with such a trifling man," telling him at one time, about September last, that "she had got along without him so long, and guessed she could yet awhile." So matters went on, the man fostering a feeling of hatred against his wife, which ended, as indicated in the above declaration, to "have her or kill her." With this fell purpose fixed in his murderer's heart he went to the house, a mere cabin of two small rooms, on the east side of Winter street, and entering the front room, sat down to await the coming of Mrs. Scott, who was absent. Several persons were in the house, among them Mr. Slaughter, Mr. Leach and Mr. Hudman. This was early in the evening. About nine o'clock the woman came home, and entering the house, spoke pleasantly to her husband. In a short time he called her outside and they held a conversation, but what was said was not audible to those within. Both came in, and a second time retired to the outer air.

This time the woman came in first, but was immediately followed by Scott, who said only, "Well, Caline, that settles it," thus briefly, but pointedly, and unknown to any but himself, pronouncing her death sentence. The murderer hesitated out a few moments, then, setting open the front door, he bade the other men to leave the house. Scarcely had they gone so before he spoke sternly and said, "Caline, come here." The doomed woman, anticipating that some thing serious was about to occur, arose without a word. That instant, presenting a revolver—a large sized six-shooter—Scott fired, being then not more than four feet from the woman. The shot took effect in the lower part of her face. She advanced a step or two, and he, retreating through the open door to the front yard, repeated the shot, which entered just over the right eyeball, passed through the woman's head and imbedded itself in the wood of the back door, ornaing Caroline Scott to the ground a corpse. The horrified spectators, among them the six-year-old daughter of the chief actors in this bloody drama, set up the most earpiercing screams, and rushing out over the body of the murdered woman, alarmed the whole neighborhood, the people rushing to the spot in crowds and adding to the terrible confusion. As soon as this portion of his work was accomplished, Scott ran toward Market street, and when in the rear of Mr. Obencuain's stable attempted to finish the ghastly job by sending a bullet crashing through his own brain. The pistol, when found, had three empty chambers. Although mortally wounded the strong man ran at least two hundred feet, and was picked up in front of Mr. Ward's residence, on the east side of Market street.

He was carried, in a state of insensibility, back to the house, and put down upon the floor in the bedroom adjoining the room in which the victim was stretched out, also on the floor, cold and stiff in death, presenting a sickening appearance, with the blood slowly oozing from nostrils and mouth and the features much distorted by the wound in the eye. When our reporter arrived at the house the man was lying with the most of his body under the bed, groveling and weltering in a small pool of blood which had flowed from the wound. A small portion of brain also made its way into sight by the same means. He was not so far gone but that when his name was demanded he could mutter "Bob Scott."

Scott is a large, powerful man, a negro, apparently thirty-five or forty years of age and a plasterer by trade. He has lived here some years, but we are unable to pronounce reliably as to his character. His wife was a mulatto or "yellow" woman, about twenty-five or thirty years of age, lightly built and of rather prepossessing appearance. She supported herself and child by sewing and taking in washing, and is represented as capable and of an amiable disposition, but evidently not lacking in spirit.

THE NATIONAL GAME.

A Remarkable Contest on the Ice.

The most noteworthy contest at base ball which ever took place on the ice was played on Saturday on the lake at Prospect Park between the Capitoline and Prospect Park Tens, the result being the success of the side having the professionals in their ten by a score of 37 to 0, the Park ten being "Chicagoed," something which has never before marked a game on the ice. Pearce, of the Mutuals, pitched on behalf of the "Caps," Ferguson not being on hand in time, and he delivered the ball with such effect that the Park batsmen were enabled to make but four base hits in the entire game. He was ably supported in the field, especially by the Hall Brothers, Brown, Ward and Decker. On the other side Dunn bore off the palm in fielding, Titterton and Gildam playing well. In batting Pearce and J. Hall led the score on the Capitoline side, and Vanderveer, Titterton and Delano the other. The first game of a new series is to be played on the Capitoline lake on Wednesday, and the return at the Park on Saturday. The following is the full score:—
