THE SILK FRAUDS.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH LAWRENCE—DISTRICT ATTORNEY BLISS SPEAKS—THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TAKES A HAND IN.

There appears to be no new developments in the silk frauds which have been so exciting a topic during the past few days. District Attorney Bliss, who was so remarkably confiding during the first few days, has become dumb as an oyster and refuses to reveal any of the secrets which he intimated he knows. No further move has been made against the importers and others who are said to have knowingly taken advantage of the customs frauds, but there is no doubt that they will be sued and rendered responsible, at least civilly, for their share in the transactions which have come to light. District Attorney Bliss receives their anxious visits daily, but refuses to give them satisfaction or consolation. On the contrary, he simply appears to know nothing. This is the policy dictated to him from Washington. He avowed this to a HERALD reporter yesterday who called upon him.

"These matters," he said, "are now in the hands of the Washington authorities and have for the present been taken out of my hands. I don't know what will be done with Lawrence, when his trial will take place, or, in fact, what disposition will be made of him. The Secretary of the Treasury has the matter under consideration, but has not communicated to me any decision he may have arrived at. So far as the case of Schultof is concerned that does not come in my department at all, but is managed by the Custom House, as with other smuggler cases."

In the meantime Lawrence remains au secret in Ludlow Street Jail, and is allowed to see only the members of his family and them in presence of some witness. He is well treated and fed, receiving his meals from the table of the Warden, and no strictness is observed toward him, except in this matter of receiving friends who, it is feared, might act as "go betweens" and serve to defeat the ends of justice. Lawrence has not complained in any way, and bears up with an apparently careless indifference, which is in the main part assumed. He hopes daily for some good news from Washington relaxing the strict surveillance which he is under. This may be part of a plan which some affect to believe, that Lawrence is willing to turn State's evidence and reveal the secrets he knows. The authorities are well aware that he may hold in his hands the credit and reputation of many government officials here and others; and the question as to whether that fact will be allowed to subserve or interfere with the proper enforcement of the law is mentioned as the possible reason of the present silence of the Treasury Department. It is also said that it may be desirable to use him against the merchants with whom he has been in relations.
