NITRATE DEPOSITS OF CHILE

Many Things to Which the Users of the Supply Should Give Close Attention.

The world's supply of nitrate, for use in the manufacture of fertilizers, explosives and other chemical products, is now derived almost entirely from the deposits of sodium nitrate in northern Chile. These deposits are vast, as compared with any probable future demand and even the best efforts of a close monopoly supervised by the Chilean government have not been able to do more than keep output and prices under some small degree of control. In ordinary times the Chilean deposits can swamp any possible competitive supply, and in the past this has operated to prevent the development of small or less well located deposits elsewhere.

The Chilean deposits have, however, one marked defect which is brought into prominence by the present European war; and which would have come out in still more disastrous form in case of a war between the United States and any power having an active fleet in the Pacific ocean. The defect is that the distribution of the output is entirely by sea, and that the steamers carrying the nitrate must make a long run along open coasts. We must, therefore, consider that nitrate, though the supply is more than ample, is likely to be entirely cut off under war conditions.

In default of a supply of Chilean nitrate, a country would have to fall back upon either (a) local or other supplies of natural potash or soda nitrates, (b) nitrogen extracted from the air, or (c) nitrates manufactured from coal tar products. All of these are technically feasible, and none are absolutely prohibitive as to cost under war conditions, though in normal times none of them can at present compete with the Chilean supply.—Engineering Magazine.

ALL RUN BY ELECTRICITY

Labor-Saving Devices a Feature of House Exhibited at Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Electrical labor-saving devices form one of the most interesting features of the manufacturers' exhibits at the Panama-Pacific exhibition. A novelty shown in this department is an all-electric house.

Many homes have been built and adapted to use electricity in as many ways as possible after construction, but the house exhibited has had the various features built in. Each room is equipped with labor-saving devices and electrically operated comforts. All the kitchen machinery, from potato peelers to the electric refrigerator, is motor driven.

The dining room is arranged so as to show how light lunches can be prepared on electric chafing dishes and stoves. In the rear of the house there is an electric workshop and a garage equipped with a battery recharging device for the electric automobile.

Who Invented Khaki?

The answer to the question, "Who invented khaki?" is not easy, although we all know that the adoption of khaki by our army dates back to the South African war. It will surprise most people, says the Liverpool Mercury, to be told that nearly fifty years ago a Liverpool celebrity advocated something akin to khaki as the most serviceable color for the uniform of our troops. W. G. Herdman, the artist, and author of "Ancient Liverpool," writing in 1869, condemned the red uniforms of the British and the white uniforms of the Austrian armies as the worst possible colors, having regard to their visibility at long distances. He added, "If armies went into action clothed in a gray-green all over, head or cap and all, they could not be distinguished till close to."

New Field for Women.

The opening of new avenues of profitable endeavor for women is a matter of considerable importance, and the Maxwell Motor company of New York is making an effort to utilize them as saleswomen. In a recent communication the president of the company says: "I believe that there is room for women in the automobile business. Women have proved to be good saleswomen and demonstrators in other lines. We believe that they will be particularly successful with automobiles, and we are going to take the trouble to find out whether we are right or wrong."

The company has accordingly put Mrs. Crystal Eastman Benedict in charge of the saleswomen's bureau and she reports that the women so far employed are proving their value.

Assembling Various Periods.

Possibly we shall continue to look as though we were at a fancy dress party if we are assembled in empire frocks, colonial ones, those of 1880 and 1850, with a dash of Russian and Algerian. It is safe to assert that if 50 women were foregathered, each wearing a gown perfectly adapted to the new spring fashions, the appearance would be that they had responded to an invitation to a costume ball representing a half dozen periods.

Wisdom of Experience.

Mrs. Enpeck—I just learned today that Sam Smith and Kate Jones were secretly married last spring. Just think of it! Married nearly a year and nobody the wiser.

Enpeck—Oh, I don't know. I'll bet poor Smith was a whole lot wiser before he had been married a month.
