THE WEATHER FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW

Steamship Arrivals and Departures—Outgoing Foreign Mails—The Fire Record

THE WEATHER.

For eastern New York, scattered thunder showers to-day but continuing warm; to-morrow, probably fair and not so warm; moderate south winds, becoming northwesterly.

For New Jersey, continued warm to-day with scattered showers and thunder storms; to-morrow, fair and slightly cooler; moderate southerly winds shifting to the northwest.

For northern New England, thunder showers to-day and probably to-morrow, cooler in the interior; moderate southwest to west winds.

For southern New England, scattered showers and thunder showers to-day and probably to-morrow, slightly cooler; moderate southwest to west winds.

Low pressure prevailed over most of the interior of the country yesterday, where the weather was cloudy and unsettled, with showers scattered over nearly all the Western States and in about all of the Southern States from Texas to Florida and in scattered places in the Atlantic States, due principally to heat. There was no storm in sight.

The heat wave prevailed principally between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic coast, the maximum temperature ranging 16 to 24 degrees. The wave will probably expend its force on the coast to-day.

Cooler weather was spreading over all the Northwest and into the Central States and upper lake regions.

In this city the day was partly cloudy, with a shower in the afternoon; continued warm and sultry; wind fresh southeasterly; average humidity 77 per cent.; barometer, corrected to read to sea level, at 8 A. M., 30.06; 3 P. M., 30.01.
