Park Avenue Hotel Liked.

Contributors to the Rod and Gun column who sent in yesterday their acceptances to the Contributors' Dinner at the Park Avenue Hotel on Monday night, November 27, wrote that they were pleased with the selection of the dining place by the committee.

Angling Abuses Condemned.

I heard that last week one man on the Sound caught 400 mackerel with hook and line. If we only had a law permitting men to take but twenty-five there would have been 375 still swimming around for others to try for, and if the uncaught were fortunate in escaping a hook long enough to produce the fishing would be still better.

The same applies to every edible fish that swims. The way that some fishermen go at it would make you feel that they desired to catch every last one and "the other fisherman be damned" as far as they are concerned. This is especially true among a certain kind of Italians and foreigners.

In Ireland every year at Donnybrook they hold a fair, and people gather from far and near, and among other things that are disposed of is lots of beer and whiskey. Each man has his cane with a big knob on the end for a handle. As the day wears on and the beer and whiskey begin to take effect some one starts something and all hands join in. The first move is to take hold of the small end of the cane so that you can work the "business end of the old blackthorn," and then the next move is "wherever you see a head hit it."

Now if every reader of this column will resolve not to "hog it" himself, and wherever he sees a person hogging it will discourage it, the abuse will soon cease. In a matter of this kind, "wherever you see a head hit it," and the end will not be far off.

A. HAMILTON, JR.

New York, Nov. 12.

Why You Must Try Trapshooting.

Have you ever shot clay birds? No? Well, you must try it! Trapshooting bids fair to become as popular as any outdoor sport we have. All you need is a gun, some credit and a trapping club to join.

The most economical method of procuring a shotgun is to insert a want ad in the classified columns of the various sporting magazines. I should read thus: "Wanted—a shotgun. Will trade my life insurance policy, my wife's diamond bracelet or my Ford."

About four days after the magazines are published you will receive a letter from Mr. Gibb of Walla Walla, Indian Territory, saying: "Dear Friend—Saw your ad in ——. Have a shotgun, good as new. Send me your life insurance and I will send you my gun."

When you get the gun all you have to pay for it will be $4.75 expressage. It will be a double barrelled eight or ten gauge gun with 34 inch barrels, weighing about twelve pounds, and one barrel rusty.

Now invite your trapshooting friend out to lunch and ask him to put you up for membership in the Gun Club. Also ask him to go to the best sporting goods store in town and help you select a good trap gun.

The latter should not cost you more than $75, or at most $100. This is not as bad as it may seem at first sight, because the dealer will allow anywhere from $3.50 to $4 on your old gun. Be sure to buy a gun that fits your friend, even if it does not fit you, remember this point.

What Happens After Election.

When you are elected into the club go out there on Saturday afternoon and mix with the boys, you might meet a good gun along. The boys will choose up sides for a friendly little match, and you may be chosen to shoot on one of the teams.

Be natural and look wise. Take your place when your name is called, but do not load your gun until it is your turn to shoot. Then you will put one shell in—say your left barrel, and after holding up the match for about five minutes you are ready to shoot.

The man handling the trap will say "Ready" and you answer, "Whenever you are."

You may vary this by saying "Pull!" When the bird is thrown get a general idea of the direction in which it is flying and pull the trigger that is try to pull it. Your gun may go off and it may not. If by chance you remembered to release the safe there will be a snap and you will have pulled the front trigger, which fired the barrel you did not load.

Curse as vehemently as you could wish at the dealer for the gun the latter being preferred under ordinary conditions.

Insist upon having another shot, when the boys see that you are serious and want your turn. Also release the safe so that you will be ready on time. If your gun goes off and hits the ground harmlessly look disdained and make out you meant it. It does happen to hit one of the boys standing for Canada and let your beard grow.

Do not feel badly if you miss every shot; do not apologize to the boys, they don't mind, they are helping to keep down the overhead charges of the club.

Go out the following Saturday—in fact, as often as you can before the first bill is sent you. Then try to talk the bank into giving you a few hundred on your house and go right to your friend. Now is the time when you will see the advisability of letting your friend pick out your gun.

He may offer you $15 for it after first telling you not to give up the game, and hurrying on to explain that a second hand gun never brings much, a fact you have already found to be true, and anyhow he says not need a new gun.

Take the fifteen in cash quick and try to borrow as much more as you think you can touch him for with a reasonable chance of success. Then pay off part of the Gun Club bill, promising to make monthly payments on it until it is fully settled.

The season for greater and lesser yellowlegs is open throughout the United States, with the exception of Utah and California.

The greater yellowlegs has a number of common or local names, including winter yellowlegs, winter snipe, large yellowlegs, greater tell tale, tell tale godwit and tattler.

The greater yellowlegs is a bird of the meadow marsh and muddy shores of fresh water streams and ponds. It has a curious habit when alighting after raising its wings and folding them slowly, nodding its head, teetering its whole body up and down and uttering its sweet whistling cries. The bird is fly compactly and turn, rise and fall as if at word of command.

The greater yellowlegs is a sociable bird and makes its presence known by its shrill whistle. As soon as it may discover their mates in coming upon stool birds their note has a frightened yelp and off they go. It is at this time that the gunner has the best time to shoot. It is usually the yellowlegs that announces to the gunner on the marsh that danger is near and that shore bird shooting has arrived.

The arrival of yellowlegs is usually in advance of heavy weather and wind.

After a long flight from the North the birds are in poor condition, but they soon fatten when on the feeding grounds.

Easily Called to Decoys.

The largest flights of greater yellowlegs do not come until August, and the species is most common in September and October. Formerly this was one of the common species of shore birds, and one much sought for by beginners. The greater yellowlegs is much sought for by gunners has also diminished in numbers.

Probably the record near Newport, R. I., gives the reason for the decrease. One man shot 362 greater yellowlegs in the eight seasons 1867-1874, on dates ranging from July 20, 1870, to November 4, 1870. His highest score, 419 birds, was in 1873, from August 19 to October 3.

Greater yellowlegs stay on Long Island sometimes until the middle of November, which explains the name given to it of winter yellowlegs.

Like the greater yellowlegs, the lesser yellowlegs is another early migrate. The greater number leave the breeding grounds by the latter part of August, and have been seen on Long Island as late as the middle of October.

The lesser yellowlegs is smaller edition of the greater yellowlegs is known as the summer yellowlegs, summer little yellowlegs and small cuca in various localities.

They can be readily called by a whistled imitation of their call, and are such a sympathetic little bird that they hover about in the places where other members of the flock have been killed.

Yellowlegs are the first arrival of the shore birds that one is permitted to shoot. They are easily called to the decoys.

Reaching Competency in Casting.

It looks easy enough to cast a 12 ounce sinker, with hooks attached, away out into the sea, but when you come to stand on the deck of a rolling boat you find that, like making a fortune in Wall Street, it is not so easy as it looks.

I myself am probably about the worst caster in all New York, but after many mishaps I am at last able to do the trick fairly well—that is, for me.

Before I arrived at my present stage of comparative competency in casting I frequently had the misfortune to send the sinker around the foremast, and at those times I noticed how my neighbors edged away from me—no doubt on the assumption that self-preservation was the first law of nature.

Then again I have been the victim of my own bungling, for on one occasion I manipulated the rod and line in such a novel fashion that the result of my eccentric cast was to land the hooks in that part of my pants that in polite society is called the breast. It was indeed very humiliating to be compelled to appeal to my friends to help take the hooks out of my nether garments, but I had the consolation of knowing that they did not go through the cloth, for had that happened this tale would be even more interesting still.

Commodore David Cameron, the old Scotch fisherman, is a past master at the art of casting, and he, being my tutor, had his whole lot to endure from such poor material as I was; but at last, after endless trouble and several bruises where I had hit him when wildly slinging my lead into space, he succeeded in teaching me enough to throw out without endangering my shipmates more than one throw out of three.

I told him one day I could do it as well as he could, and, intending to convince him, I let go, and the good commodore got another rap on the head.

He hasn't been fishing with me since, though I hope to placate him again, and I can't blame him for his caution, for he would be pretty near as safe in the trenches in France, as within twenty feet of me when aboard one of those "long, low, rakish craft" that go fishing.

It looked easy to me once, but I have recanted, in fact, I think it is about as easy for a camel to go through the eye of a needle as it is for me to make a shot without manslaughter being the result. One one occasion the commodore, in his extremity after repeated clips on the head and other parts said something that sounded like "ought to use a dropline," to which I replied in language that was not as chaste as it might have been, I regret to say.

My indebtedness to him, however, is great, and therefore do I publicly testify to his forbearance with a most inept pupil.

Hence these tears.

Enthusiasm Vapor of Life.

Enthusiasm is the vapor of life. It fades into thin air or is condensed into living water. Those who let it fade shrivel; those who use its living waters grow. There has been more enthusiasm than ever before both late and expressed, generated at this election.

Now turn it into conservation and protection of New York's waters and the harvest will surpass that gained from use in any other direction. Tillers of the soil are all getting rich. There are few tillers of the water, yet they reward sixfold more than the land. Our fish ponds are now inadequate for their work, yet our waterways are unheiped. Cheap food and cheap transportation are within and upon them. Warm up.

Come to meetings of United Anglers League and bring friends. Meeting nights are the second and fourth Thursdays of each month, in the World auditorium.

Lucky Stiefvater of the Seaweeds.

Adam Stiefvater is called the "lucky" fisherman of the Seaweed Fishing Club. In the last three trips each time he has caught the heaviest fish, winning the pool.

Maloney and McGlynn Inquiry.

What's the matter with Maloney and McGlynn? I should think now that tomcods are biting we would hear of the doings of the Irishmen.
