From the speed at which earthquake waves travel through the earth an English scientist has constructed a theory that the world has a dense central core, which may be measured in time.

Seeding Alfalfa in Corn.

The seeding of alfalfa into corn is becoming increasingly common in South Dakota. It has been done successfully not only here but elsewhere and the practice is gaining favor rather than otherwise.

It has long been suggested that the seeding of alfalfa in the early spring with a thin nurse crop of early oats usually results in a stand of alfalfa without missing a crop for the year in which the alfalfa is sown. This same advantage also results when the alfalfa seed is put into standing corn, say in the middle part of August. The method of seeding alfalfa in corn has the additional advantage that it misses the early weeds. The early weeds, namely, those weed pests which start in the early part of the season are especially harmful to alfalfa. Only a few comparatively harmless species of weeds make a start as late as August. Consequently, so far as weed competition is concerned, there is great advantage in seeding alfalfa late.

If you keep your corn clean this summer, the corn ground will probably be in excellent shape for an alfalfa seed bed in August, you can seed the alfalfa right into the standing corn at the usual rate of eight pounds per acre. It is possible to seed it broadcast and harrow it in with a one-horse cultivator, or perhaps better still seed it in with a one-horse alfalfa seeder made for the purpose. Such machines are now being put on the market according to reports.

There is one obvious objection to seeding alfalfa into corn and that is, the interference of the corn stalks. Those who have tried it, however say that this interference is not great. Moreover, it is better to have alfalfa hay with a few corn stalks in it than to have no alfalfa hay at all.

Suppose while we are riding the cultivator up and down the rows this summer, we use a little time at any rate thinking about the desirability of seeding alfalfa in corn.

Every once in a while somebody asks when to sow alfalfa in South Dakota. As a matter of fact, the rule concerning the time to sow alfalfa is a little like the rule for trimming apple trees: when your knife is sharp. It is possible to sow alfalfa, in fact, almost any time during the summer when the ground is clean and when there is rain enough. The manner of seeding and the kind of weather have more to do with success almost than just the time of year it happens to be.—A. N. Hume, Agronomist, S. D. State College.

RUSSIAN EXILE LECTURES HERE

From Russian Moushik to American Lecturer in Nine Years
In the astounding record of one of our Chautauqua lecturers. Born in a Russian village, he knows the Russian peasant life because he was a part of it. Through good fortune he was one of the small percentage of his race permitted to enter the government school from which he graduated four years later to find the higher avenues of education in Russia closed to him. An exile from his own country, loving the people of his country as only an exile can, he came to America, where he fought the poverty of New York's great East Side, endured the struggles of the sweat shop, battled for his life with disease, won his way through the Stuyvesant High School of New York City, entered Colgate University and before finishing the course was filling week-end lecture dates for one of the Eastern bureaus. They promptly added him to their lecture staff upon his graduation.

MORRIS G. BENDIS
Starting with the iron heel of the czar's oppression, and tasted the fruit of freedom, the contrast he draws is not only thrilling but the cogency of his argument is convincing, while his command of pure and beautiful English is a delight. He has been secured to lecture at the Chautauqua.
