DISTRICT COURT.—This Court begins its session on Monday next for the trial of Admiralty cases.

POLICE COURT, JUNE 1.—Fifteen cases were disposed of as follows: Intoxication 3; arson 1; petit larceny 4; keeping houses of ill-fame 2; assault and battery 1; grand larceny 2; vagrancy 2—total 15.

William McNulty, who was charged with stealing two overcoats from the residence of George Mygatt, valued at $30, was fined twenty dollars and sent to the county jail on bread and water for thirty days.

The case of Ephraim Ballett, charged with setting fire to a frame dwelling belonging to John A. Stephens on the 27th ult., was continued.

POLICE CLERK'S REPORT.—By the Report of the Clerk of the Police Court, for May, submitted to the Council last night, we condense the following:

Total number of city cases 175; State cases 57; State examinations 12—total 224. Amount of fines collected in city cases $761; costs $128,64—total $889,64. Amount of fines collected $337; costs $23,43—total $405,43. Amount of fees paid witnesses $13,50—balance paid into city treasury $411,90. In State cases the amount of fines assessed was $249; costs $231,54; amount of costs in State examinations $105,54—total $586,98. Fines collected $37; costs $31,23—collected and paid into the county county $68,23.

BURGLARY.—About one o'clock yesterday morning, Louis Hanslar, sleeping in the meat market of John Greening, River street, was aroused by falling glass in the back part of the market and the river. He sprang out of bed, and saw a man standing inside the door, with whom he immediately grappled, and each threw the other twice. They closed for the fourth time, when Louis' foot slipped through a hole in the floor, leaving him completely at the mercy of his antagonist. Louis still kept hold of the burglar's collar, when the latter drew a knife and threatened to kill the former unless he released his grip. Louis being entirely alone, unable to extricate himself from his position, and the room dark, he let go of the burglar, when he immediately fled; leaving behind him, however, his cap and a large bunch of keys, all of which articles are now in possession of Marshal Gallagher. Louis deserves credit for the bravery he displayed in thus attempting to arrest, alone and in the dark, an armed and desperate burglar.

CLEVELAND, May 31, 1858.

CLEVELAND LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.—At a meeting of this Association, held at their rooms on Monday evening, a new Constitution was adopted, and officers elected for the ensuing year. The Constitution contains many new and important points. The main features are as follows:

The first section of the second article provides that any person paying two dollars (instead of three dollars as heretofore) into the treasury of the Association may become a member, and continue such membership by an annual payment of a like sum. The second section of the same article provides that persons paying fifty dollars at any one time may become life members with all the privileges of membership.

The third article prescribes the duties of officers, and makes the President, Vice-President, Corresponding and Recording Secretaries, and Treasurer ex-officio members of the Board of Directors. The Board of Directors have the direction and management of all the affairs and property of the Association; make such regulations as shall be deemed requisite for the direction of its affairs; but shall not have power, nor shall the Trustees, to contract debts, except such as shall be authorized by a meeting at which fifty members must be present. At the end of each year, at the annual meeting, they are to make a written report of their proceedings and the condition of the Association. Vacancies in the Board are elected by members thereof; regular meetings of which are to be held on the first Monday in every month.

The annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers is to be held on the second Monday in April of each year.

Special meetings shall be called by the President when requested in writing by twenty-five members, and notice of such meetings must be published five times in a daily paper of the city. Notices of amendments to the Constitution must be published ten times, and must specifically state the amendment to be offered. All meetings of the Association, except for the amendment of the Constitution and the contraction of debts, are legal when participated in by twenty-five members. Voting by proxy prohibited.

The Treasurer is required to give bonds in the sum of one thousand dollars.

The above are the main features of the Constitution. The following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year:

President—H. M. CHAPIN.
Vice-President—B. F. PEIXOTTO.
Cor. Sec'y—FAYETTE BROWN.
Rec. Sec'y—H. P. CLARK.
Treasurer—CHARLES W. STANDART.
Directors—J. M. ADAMS, WILLIAM F. SMITH, F. B. PRATT, G. W. DURGIN.

These are all gentlemen of energy and perseverance, and under their new organization may be expected speedily to extricate the Association from its existing difficulties, and place it upon a firm and abiding basis. The institution is a public necessity, and one which the public will do well to foster and support.

MORNING LEADER.

THE CHILD AND THE MOURNERS.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

A little child beneath a tree,
Sat and chanted cheerily
A lofty song, a pleasant song,
Which was—she sang it all day long—
"When the wind blows the boughs shall fall,
But a good God reigns over all!"

There passed a lady by the way,
Meaning in the face of day;
Tears were built upon her cheek,
Grief in her heart too great to speak;
Her husband died but years ago,
And left her in the world forlorn.

She stopp'd and listen'd the child,
That look'd to Heaven, and, singing, smiled.
And saw not, for her own despair,
Another lady, young and fair,
Who, also passing, stopp'd to hear
The infant's anthem ringing clear.

For she, but a few and days before,
Had lost the little babe she bore;
And grief was heavy at her soul
As that sweet memory stole her circle,
And show'd how bright had been the past,
The present drear and overcast.

And as they stood beneath the tree,
Listening, soothed, and placidly,
A youth came by, whose sunken eyes
Spoke of a land of miseries;
And he, arrested like the twain,
Stopp'd to listen to the strain.

Death had bow'd the youthful head
Of his bride beloved, his bride newed;
Her marriage robes were fitted on,
Her fair young face with kisses alone,
When the destroyer smote her low
And changed the lover's bliss to woe.

And these three listen'd to the song,
Silv'ry-toned, and sweet and strong,
Which that child, the live-long day,
Chanted to itself in play:
"When the wind blows, the blossoms fall,
But a good God reigns over all!"

The widow's lips impalsied moved,
The mother's grief, though unreproved,
Softened, as her trembling tongue
Repeated what the infant sung;
And the sad lover, with a start,
Conn'd it over in his heart.

And though the child—if child it were,
And not a seraph sitting there—
Was seen no more, the surrowing three
Went on their way resignedly,
The song still ringing in their ears—
Was it music of the spheres?

Who shall tell? They did not know,
But in the midst of deepest woe
The steels mean'd when sorrow grew,
To warn them and console them too;
"When the wind blows, the blossoms fall,
But a good God reigns over all!"

OUR CHARLEY.

From Titan.

I will tell you one thing more of Charley, to prove to you how brave a boy he was.

One or his chief pleasures was to join the fisher lads in their perilous expeditions, after the nests of the eider-duck, and for the eggs of other sea fowl. With the aid of an iron bar and a rope, he would swing himself over the face of the steepest cliffs, and into caverns which one would have thought no creature could have entered save with wings.

Upon one occasion, he went out with another youth, with only one strong rope between them, and, instead of one remaining above the precipice while the other went below, they thought it would be excellent fun to go down together. They chose, too, for their amusement, one of the loftiest and less frequented cliffs of all, midway in which, however, they had seen from their boat, once, a great cave, much haunted by the sea fowl.

They fixed their bar firmer than usual, and took to the rope together, the fisher lad being undermost. They laughed and chatted in air, with the sea four hundred feet beneath them, as town bred lads would laugh and chatter in a swing; but they found it by no means easy to reach the cavern with their double load, being afraid to make a pendulum of the rope, for fear it should wear away from the increased friction at the summit.

At last, the boy beneath obtained a footing, and held the rope fast while Charles slid off into the hole. But, attracted by the cry which the latter raised at sight of the myriads of nests which lay within, and confused, perhaps, besides, with the swinging, the fisher lad let the rope slip through his fingers; once only it swung within distance, but in his agitation he made a futile grasp at it, and after one or two vibrations, succeeding one another more rapidly than I can write of them, the two boys were left in their living tomb, with the means of escape indeed within sight, but only to tantalize them with its proximity; seven or eight feet of fathomless space lay between them and it—a situation to them, who well understood it, more awfully perilous even than it seems. No vessel ever came near enough, on account of the breakers, to see any signal such as they could make from the sea; they had left no word at home of the whereabouts they were going; and even should they be found, it was very improbable that means could be devised for their rescue, while they had still the strength and spirit to take advantage of them. The boys looked at one another in blank dismay, as they thought of all these things.

"My poor, dear mother," said the fisher lad, with a groan, for he was her only hope.

"Supposing one dropped," asked Charles, thoughtfully, after a few moments, "would this tide carry one for certain on to shore in the fishing bay?"

"Yes," said the other, "and within the next hour, to a certainty, but it would be only as a dead corpse, Master Charles."

"God alone knows that," quoth Charley; "we must trust in him."

He wrote down upon a slip of paper (which I now possess, with the writing just a little, a very little shaken, poor fellow, when it gets to the last message) so no such words as these:

"Robert Harris is in the Gull's Hole upon Wadden Cliff; he has lost hold of the rope, and must have help at once. My dearest love to all at home. CHARLEY."

He put this up in his case bottle, taking the cap off at the bottom, so that the writing might be seen at once through the glass, and buttoned it up in his coat pocket.

"My people are richer than yours, Bob, and can better spare me," said he. "I am going to leap at the rope, old fellow; let us shake hands."

The lad tried to persuade him not to risk it, but rather to hope for rescue by means less desperate. But—

"Don't unnerve me, Bob," was the simple, heroic answer; "once, twice, thrice, and here goes."

The other hid his face while the spring was taken, listening for the far-off splash, perhaps, that should tell him his friend was dead, who had spoken to him the instant before. But when he looked up, our Charley was holding well on to the rope, only he was deadly pale. He got to the cave again in safety, and the two rescued lads came up to life again, with their pockets stuffed with elder down.

Charles was a brave boy—his widowed mother's darling and mine, in whose care she left him, and beloved by all. He did not know her long, but loved her dearly, and had the strangest thoughts about her always. He thought that she was near to him, and, upon the eve of any special peril, he seemed to grow conscious of her presence. The night before he left us, as we wandered in and out of the rocks by the sea shore, and around the leafy paths that thread the copse, and up and down the level sands, all grown so doubly dear to him at parting, he was full of this. Perhaps it was but natural, having dwelt so long upon the happy past, and stroke by stroke together retouched many a picture hanging dim enough in the long gallery of memory, that we should come at last to her. With our eyes upon that boundless world of waters, darkening as the night drew on, with that whisper of eternity breaking softly upon our ears, alone, and in that beautiful spot, it was natural, I say, that we should speak of the beloved dead.

"Mother"—he called me "mother" even then—"she is listening to us now," he said. "I shall see her in my dreams to-night; she is quite close to us."

I begged him not to talk thus, and reminded him that it was time to go within.

"Nay," said he, "but let us once more climb the Down."

So we toiled up the steep behind us in silence, under the innumerable stars.

"See yon," said he, when we had reached the summit, "yon steadfast lights on ocean!—There rides a mighty fleet, the guardian angels of our land, and all night long they keep strict watch and ward because of us. There were they still, though hid from view, until we gained the headland, and there will they be when we descend again. So it is, as I think, with some of us; few souls but have some spirit watching over them, although unseen, save, haply, when a more than common danger threatens, when heavenly stoops to earthly, and the fleet sails round to us."

I do not mention this because I think such a belief was to Charles's credit—for I believe it to be a false and weak one—but to prove that he was no mere samphire gatherer and pillager of gulls' nests, a youth of nerves and sinews only. Had he been so, would Janet, the enthusiastic, the poetess, have ever loved him so dearly as she did! Would gentle Alice, for whom I have heard him weave full many a fairy tale! Would Herby, whose young head he filled with visions of tilt and tourney!

It was terrible, the parting from a lad like this; but he thought the Fusabad appointment was too good to let slip, for our sakes, although, for himself, he would have much preferred the military service. We watched the mighty vessel that bore him out, rounding the point and speeding into space, farther than any other dewy eyes in Britain. Our roof, I think, is the last English home the exile sees, and the first speck which, after weary years, grows gradual to the sight on his return. Through all the war in the Crimea, we saw the very last of every squadron, the smoke clouds streaming on the horizon's verge, and the first glimmering of those countless sails which brought up from the warring "under-world" our wounded thousands. If the wind was favorable, we could hear the martial-band music, nay, even the cheers themselves, of the gallant soldiers, in the vessels outward bound; and in the homeward, if the skies were clear, we could see, with telescopes, the very beds of the wounded, ay, and perhaps the dead, brought up upon the decks for disembarkation. We were sad enough, indeed, but we had no miseries of this kind then to dread for Charley. The East was then at peace, whither he was bound; the vessel that bore him was cleaving tranquil seas.

PORCELAIN TEETH.

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR METHod of producing Artificial Teeth over any other known method:

1st. IMPLICITY.—Our is so chemically united in all its parts, and of the same quality of material.

2d. SOLIDITY.—That it can be made to adapt herself to the model of her own impression. Thus adaptation secures unusual comfort and stability ever after.

3d. PURITY.—The entire Plate and Teeth are impervious to the action of any known chemical agent, hence in disease or health, proof against the corrosive and offensive secretions of the mouth, common to pale plate work, and wood and rubber machines.

4th. COLOR.—Bright, lively, and a good imitation of nature.

5th. It.—Any method of producing relief of Artificial Teeth simultaneously united in one piece, that will not pass the closest investigation, is a counterfeit of true Porcelain.

PATRONAGE.—Since April, 1856, we have inserted Five Hundred and Seven Sets. Of this number, equivalent, we have taken the place of Gold Plate work. In the last case we have all have given their continued to its superiority, and we will at other cases where our terms have been complied with. In no case where teeth have been put in have there been any dissatisfaction.

TERMS.—According to the nature of the case, and given after examination.

PAYMENT.—Upon the receipt of the order, or on delivery. Persons with Gold Plate can apply their plate in part payment.

GUARANTY.—Satisfaction, provided the terms of payment and Special Instructions have been complied with.—Persons wanting information, reference will be given to those who have tested our work.

We prefer to apply partial sets soon after the extraction of the natural teeth—one week is long enough to intervene between the extraction and the insertion.

To our patrons, and those who desire to become such, we will say that our arrangements are such that we can and will supply an entire double set of teeth fitted, satisfactorily within two days after the arrival of the patient.

TO THE DENTAL PROFESSION.

Those of you favorable to this enterprise, we will make arrangements with you, by which impressions may be taken of your patients' cases, in artificial models, &c., and forwarded to us by Express, and without delay returned fitted with reasonable accuracy to the fitting and articulating model. We will also make Block Work to order as occasionally desired.

Testimonials and References.

have observed with much interest for the last two years, above method of producing Artificial Teeth, and believe statements of this Circular correct.

T. GARLICK.

I have investigated with care, for the last three years, the above method of producing Artificial Teeth, and to the Laboratory of Dr. Wright, and seen use, and can say with confidence that his plan is the best known use, and entirely successful when applied under his observation. The superiority of this kind of Dental work over all or any kind of metallic plate, cannot be questioned, and the state ment in Dr. Wright's Circular of the number of cases where his work has been put in, is true. Much of this work on good plate had been furnished by the best Dentists in the country. I am not conversant with the success of Porcelain work in the hands of others than Dr. Wright.
