Dentistry.

DENTISTRY
AT 211 SUPERIOR ST.

IF YOUR TEETH ARE GOOD, read the following lines. If your teeth are bad, read them with great care. If you have no teeth at all nap—A fact, that is daily exhibited in the streets, in the social circle and in the parlor, by the humblest peasant and the proudest autocrat is that hundreds of persons lose good sets of teeth for the want of the timely aid of a good and skilful dentist. A poor and inferior operation is in many cases worse than none at all. If your teeth are good, have them examined by a good dentist, and keep them in order. If poor, no time should be lost but have them repaired, the sooner the better, and escape that march Burns says is the well of all diseases. All irregularities of the teeth should be attended to in childhood and youth.
All persons desirous of the dental operations are invited to call at my room where particular attention is given to the preservation of the natural teeth, where the

INFATUATION;

OR, THE FORGED CHEQUE.

THE MERCHANT AND HIS WIFE.

CHAPTER VII.

Not many minutes after all this was accomplished, she was going down to the drawing-room when she heard Mr. Cleveland enter the house. He bounced up the stairs, and went into it with her.

"Where did Mr. Grubb breakfast this morning?" he inquired, after a few moments spent in greeting, Charley devouring her with his eyes all the time.

"What a question! He breakfasted at home for all I know."

"Yes, yes, dear Adela. I meant in which room." For Mr. Grubb sometimes breakfasted in the morning-room, and sometimes in a little apartment where he kept his papers.

"I really don't know, and don't care," returned Lady Adela, connecting the question somehow, in her own mind, with the present of coffee he had received. "His breakfasting, and everything else that he does, is a matter of absolute indifference to me. Why do you ask?"

"Because Mr. Grubb has missed his chequebook, and has sent me for it. He thinks he must have left it on the breakfast table."

"Charley," she said, "I was just wanting you. Will you do me a favor?"

"I will do everything you wish," he answered, his tones literally trembling with tenderness.

"I want you to go to the bank in Lombard street and get a check cashed. Mr. Grubb gave it me this morning, and I am in a hurry to get the money, for I expect people here every minute with accounts. Take a cab and go at once."

"I will. I can leave the chequebook in the city on my way."

"Nonsense, don't wait to find the chequebook. I will hunt it up while you are gone. You will not be long, and I tell you I am all impatience."

Mr. Cleveland hesitated. "I scarcely know what to say," he replied, dubiously. "Mr. Grubb is waiting for the cheque book."

"Very well, Charles," she returned, in a resentful tone, as if she felt deeply hurt, "if you like Mr. Grubb better than you do me, you will oblige him first. Why, you would be there and back in a twinkling."

"Dearest Lady Adela! Like Mr. Grubb better than——Well, I will do it, though I dare say I shall get into a row. Have the chequebook ready, that I may not lose a moment when I get back." And Lady Adela nodded assent.

"A confounded row, too" he muttered to himself as he tore down stairs, and into a cab which happened to be passing; "but I would go through a whole thunder cloud full for her." Charley gave a concise word to the driver, and away dashed the cab towards Lombard street.

He was back in an incredible short space of time, and paid the notes over to her.

"Have you found the cheque book!"

"I declare I never thought about it," was Lady Adela's reply; "but he breakfasted in the morning room, I hear. Perhaps you will find it there."

He rushed down to the morning room, which was on the ground floor, and there on the table was the missing cheque book. Oh, wary Lady Adela!

She followed him in. "Charley," she whispered, "don't say you have been out for me—no need to say you have seen me. The fact is that precious husband of mine has got a jealous fit upon him, and last night accused me of laughing and talking too much with Mr. Cleveland. If they find fault that you have been long, make an excuse that you were detained on business of your own."

He nodded in the affirmative. But a red vermillion was stealing over his face, dying it to the very roots of his hair, and his heart's pulses were rising high. For surely in that last speech she meant to imply that she loved him. And Master Charles felt his brain turn round as it had never turned before, and he bent that flushed face down upon her hand, and left on it an impassioned kiss by way of adieu.

Lady Adela was ill at ease that day. Reckless as she was to her husband's good opinions, she could not help being dissatisfied with what she had done. Not that she much feared the consequences, but she would dislike exposure. Mr. Howard's name as well as her husband's! She lost herself in a reverie, her mind running from one point to another, was such a case ever known as that of a wife being brought to a trial for——"Whatever possesses me to dwell upon such thing!" she mentally uttered, starting up in anger with herself. "Rather order my carriage and go and pay last night's losses."

Mr. Grubb and Charles Cleveland came home as usual to dinner. Neither alluded to the unpleasant topic uppermost in her mind, so she concluded that as yet nothing had come out. The next day was Sunday, when of course she was safe. On Monday Mr. Grubb went to business at the customary hour, but returned at 12 to attend some influential public meeting at the west-end, connected with politics. In the evening he sat down to dinner alone with Lady Adela. The dessert had just been placed on the table, when a servant entered and said Mr. Howard was below—had desired him to say that he had called on a matter of pressing business.

"Pressing business!" echoed Mr. Grubb.—"Show Mr. Howard up. A chair, Richard, and glasses."

He entered, bowing low to Lady Adela. A hard featured man; older than his senior partner, with a rusty black coat on his back, and the small-pox on his face.

"Why, Howard, this is quite a stretch for you, to come all the way up here! Sit down.—Anything new! Anything happened!"

"Why, yes," replied Mr. Howard, who was a slow-speaking man, giving one the idea that the bump of caution must be large on his head.—"Thank you, port."

"What is it!" inquired Mr. Grubb.

"I will enter upon this matter presently," he replied, deliberately sipping his wine. By which, of course, Mr. Grubb understood that his cautious partner would only speak when they were alone.

Lady Adela gulped down her wine, and went up to the drawing room. She felt sure, as if she could have read it in his thoughts, that "that horrid Howard" had come about the cheque. She did not care so much that her husband should find it out, he might do his best and worst, but that the other should know it, perhaps take steps—could he take steps! would the law justify it! She did not know, and sat cowering in dismay and terror.

At this moment she heard a cab rattle into the square and stop at the door. Som thing whispered her it was Charles Cleveland, for he had rather a habit of dashing up to the door in cabs. No other than Charley himself. He had just returned from Brighton, from a two days' visit to his father and Lady Mary. She flew half way down the stairs and met a servant.

"That is Mr. Cleveland, I think. Tell him to come to me in the drawing-room at once. I want to see him particularly."

He came joyfully in. To meet her, after this temporary absence, was as light breaking in upon darkness. "Oh, Charles," she said, giving him both her hands, "surely some good fairy sent you! I am in deep distress."

"Let me soothe it," he earnestly uttered, retaining her hands in his, as he led her across the room. "If I can, I will."

"I am in sore need of a friend—to—to—shelter me,' she exclaimed, in agitation—"great, desperate need!"

"Then suffer me to be that friend," he implored. "Suffer me, Lady Adela."

"But it may bring danger, difficulty upon you, even disgrace. I believe I ought not."

"Danger and disgrace would be welcome, borne for you. Pray confide in me."

"I will," she said, her agitation increasing.—"That cheque—oh, Charles, do you not think ill of me! It was done in a moment of irritation."

"Say on, dearest Lady Adela."

"That cheque he did not give me. I had asked him for money, and he refused, harshly, offensively; so I drew the cheque. What can they do to me! Mr. Howard's name was to it as well as his!"

There was a momentary pause. Charley saw all the difficulty of the matter, as she had lightly called it. But his infatuated love for her was working strongly in his heart, and he formed a hasty, chivalrous resolve that he would shield her from the disgrace she had brought upon herself, rejoicing that he should suffer shame for her sake.

"They cannot do anything to me, I believe," she went on. "But the exposure! that would drive me wild.—Oh, Charles, can nothing be done!"

"You shall never repent your confidence," he whispered, passionately wringing her hands.—"Not a breath of suspicion shall come near you. I will shield you—proud to do it—shield you, if needs be, with my life. Without you that life would be of little value, for it is bound up in yours."

"Now, stop, Charles; you must not undertake to say such things to me. They are not right, and it is all nonsense besides. I could not permit you. That man is my husband, you know."

"Forgive me," he murmured, "I never intended to say aught that he or you could object to. Deeply as I love you—bear with me, dearest Lady Adela, for this one word of avowal, which I will never recur to—wildly as I love you, I have imposed silence upon my own feelings, and I have resolved that no temptation shall betray them into disloyal bounds. That resolve I have hitherto kept, and will keep it, as I will the other; to protect and shield you through all. I swear it."

She drew her hands from him, and sat down, completely reassured, knowing and feeling that she might place implicit trust in him, and that the disgrace was averted from her.

Which was a deal more than she deserved.—Don't you think so?

WIGS! WIGS! WIGS!
BATCHELOR'S WIGS AND TOUPEES surpass all. They are elegant, light, easy and durable.
Fitting to a charm—not turning up behind—no shrinking the head; indeed, this is the only Establishment where these things are properly understood and made.

Cleveland Female Seminary.

S. N. SANFORD, A. M., Principal.

THIS NOBLE INSTITUTION will enter upon its NEXT TERM on Thursday, February 8th, 1860, under the following able and experienced

BOARD OF INSTRUCTION.

S. N. SANFORD, A. M., PRINCIPAL, Natural and Moral Sciences.
Mrs. M. L. H. SANFORD, Associate Principal.
SAMUEL ST. JOHN, LL. D., Natural History and Physiology.
Miss LINDA T. GUILFORD, Mathematics and English Grammar.
Miss JULIA S. HOPKINS, Rhetoric, Criticism, and English Literature.
Miss HANNAH B. SMITH, Latin, Greek, and History.
Miss JULIA L. HUGGINS, Arithmetic, Geography, and History.
Miss SARAH A. NOBLE, Drawing and Painting.
Mrs. S. C. BARRETT, Instrumental Music.
Mrs. ELIZA SHEPHERD, Vocal Music.
Mons. FERDINAND SUBIT, M. D., French Language and Literature.
Mrs. HELEN M. WRIGHT, Matron.
Mr. LEVI BUTTLES, Business Assistant.

Parents are assured that while boarding pupils contribute much more than day pupils to the support, the permanency and success of the Institution are enhanced, by systematic arrangement of their time, their study, their recreation, and by their withdrawal from the allurements and interruptions of home and society, to do vastly more and better for them than we can for day pupils, and afford to them advantages that cannot be secured in any day school.

It is, therefore, hoped that all who come from abroad, will enter as boarding pupils, and that citizens of Cleveland will, so far as they can make it convenient to do so, send their daughters as boarding pupils, thus advancing the prosperity and usefulness of their own Institution, of which they should, and may justly, be proud; and at the same time, be more than repaid, by the greater advantages thus secured.

No pains will be spared to render their connection with the Institution both pleasant and profitable. It will be the constant care and effort of all in any way connected with the management of the Institution, to secure the highest possible advantages in all departments of a thorough and liberal education.

Superior advantages are afforded to those who wish to attend to Instrumental Music, Vocal Music, French, Drawing and Painting as these departments are under the charge of teachers who devote themselves to their respective departments, and have thus attained a high degree of excellence.

Mons. Subit, a native of Paris, a fine scholar and superior linguist, being a teacher by profession, teaches with a rare and precious rarely observed; and as he resides in the Seminary, his pupils have the best possible opportunity of learning to speak the language correctly and with fluency.

Pupils from the city, whose parents desire it, will be allowed to spend the Sabbath at home, but no deduction will be made from the bills of such, as no expense is thereby saved to the Seminary; and indeed, we greatly prefer to have all remain with us without interruption, through the term.

Day pupils desiring the services of the Omnibus from their homes to the Seminary and back, can be accommodated at a reasonable rate, by applying at the Omnibus office, or at the Seminary.

Citizens and others are invited to call and examine the Institution and its beautiful surroundings, and satisfy themselves that advantages superior to those here offered, are not to be found in this country.

TERMS:—For Board and Tuition per Term of Twenty Weeks, $100. For Tuition of Day Pupils, from $10 to $20. Bills payable in advance. No pupils received for less than an entire term—twenty weeks.

Sewing Machines.

"FOREST CITY" SEWING MACHINE
DOUBLE THREAD—PRICE $25.

A NEW AND SUCCESSFUL SEWING MACHINE has been invented, and is now being manufactured in Cleveland, Ohio, by Mr. Konigslow, Mechanic st., which for its superior workmanship and effective manner in which it sews, places it at once among

THE BEST OF ITS KIND,
AND THE BEST FOR THE PRICE NOW MADE.

It possesses many advantages over cheaper Machines, making the same stitch, runs as quietly as any, and STITCHING almost NOISELESS, and rapid if necessary. It has a power Under-feed, and can be adapted to thick or thin Goods with great facility.

I have secured the General Agency for selling this Machine and appointing Agents.

Agents Wanted in every County in Ohio
AT ONCE.

About thirty Counties in the Northern part of Ohio are already engaged.

Agents also wanted in every State to sell Machines and appoint Agents. Good inducements offered.

Letters addressed to me will receive prompt attention.

HOLIDAY
PRESENTS!

THE MOST VALUABLE HOLIDAY PRESENT that can be given to a Wife or Lady friend, is a
WHEELER & WILSON'S
SEWING MACHINE!
The HIGHEST PREMIUM again awarded to the WHEELER & WILSON MACHINE, by the Committee at the Fair of the American Institute in New York, at the National Fair held at Chicago, and at all the principal State Fairs held the past season; proving beyond a doubt that the WHEELER & WILSON MACHINE
stands first and foremost in all cases where an Exhibition is had, showing the merits of different kinds. And no disinterested person will dispute the justice and propriety of these decisions. A test of over seven years hard use, has satisfied all competent judges that
WHEELER & WILSON'S MACHINE IS THE BEST IN THE WORLD!

A few of the many reasons given why WHEELER & WILSON'S stands pre-eminently above all others, are—

1st. Wheeler & Wilson's is much simpler than the others, requiring less than half the amount of machinery.

2d. As the result of this simplicity, this Machine is much less liable than others to get out of repair, as the application of machinery increases the tendency to disarrangement.

3d. Another result of this simplicity is durability.

4th. Less friction; consequently, greater ease and rapidity of motion, with less noise.

5th. The Wheeler & Wilson's makes what is popularly known as the LOCK STITCH, one that will not rip nor RAVEL, and the same upon both sides of the CLOTH.

6th. It makes a more beautiful seam.

7th. It takes less thread, can be applied to a greater variety of uses, &c., &c.

But to understand its advantages, every one should examine for themselves.

At the present prices, they come within the reach of all who wish a good and RELIABLE Sewing Machine. An examination is solicited, at the Office, Mendelson Block, 246 Superior street, Cleveland, Ohio.

BRADSHAW'S IMPROVED (LOCK STITCH) SHUTTLE MACHINE.

Universally conceded to be the most wonderful triumph in mechanical art, and decidedly the best and simplest shuttle Machine ever yet introduced. This machine, from its simplicity in construction, is particularly recommended for the use of Tailors, and for Plantation, Family and other sewing, and all that have used it commend in our estimate of its capabilities, as I say that it can be worked with ease and certainty by sewers of the most ordinary capacities. For manufacturing purposes it has no equal.
