The Pennsylvania Coal Oils.

In an article on the coal oils of Pennsylvania, now receiving so much attention, the Springfield Republican says:—

The process of collecting is simple and inexpensive, after the first cost of opening the wells, the mingled oil and water being pumped into troughs, from which the water passes off at the bottom and the oil at the top. It is afterwards clarified and is fitted for burning in lamps, but still retains much of that pungent, bituminous odor which is so disagreeable to most people—the concentrated essence of the pines and spruces of innumerable ages ago. This oil is the ancient petroleum, a variety of liquid bitumen flowing from beds associated with the coal strata, and expressed by pressure and heat. It is found in great abundance in Asia, and immense quantities of it are used in Burmah, whose oil wells produce half a million hogsheads of oils annually. These wells have been in operation for centuries, and yet the supply continues as liberal as ever, and bids fair to last while the world stands. In this country are many places where petroleum is indicated, and we presume it will be found wherever there is any amount of coal. As a cheap illuminator its production is a great public benefit, and it will undoubtedly become a source of wealth to thousands of those interested in the business. Some are so confident of its abundance, and the low price at which it will be afforded, as to predict that it will take the place of coal for fuel on the ocean steamers, thus reclaiming for freight a large part of the vessels now laden with coal.

FRENCH DUTIES ON TOBACCO.—As is well known, the Government in France enjoys a monopoly of the trade in Tobacco, the importation and manufacture of the article being intrusted to a commission called the Regie, employing a capital of forty-five million dollars. There are no duties levied on American Tobacco in France when imported in American or French bottoms, but the monopoly of the Regie amounts, sometimes, to a duty of 40 cents per pound on the article. In 1855 there was imported into France of American Tobacco 40,866,000 pounds, which yielded to the Government a revenue of $16,000,000.
