SPECIAL NOTICES.

FOR MORE THAN TWENTY years HAYNES' VENETIAN HAIR DYE has stood the test of trial, and is constantly increasing in public favor.

THE VENETIAN HAIR DYE is the best and cheapest made. Its price is only 75 cents, and each bottle contains double the quantity of dye to those usually sold for $1.

THE HAIR DYE is manufactured by a peculiar process, which renders it infinitely superior to any dye in market. Being complete in one bottle, no preparation is required, which greatly simplifies the application.

IN USING THIS DYE you avoid that rusty, dead appearance by which dyed hair and whiskers are so readily recognized, when an inferior article has been used, as it produces a perfectly natural color of any shade that is required, from a rich brown to a jetty, lustrous black, that will not stunt, crock or stain the clothing. Invest 75 cents, and you will be convinced. Sold by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

DAILY LEADER

THE CATTLE PLAGUE.

Its History—Introduction into England—Precautionary Measures.

In the old world two mighty scourges are at the present time marching westward—one destroying man, the other beast. The former is the Asiatic cholera, reported at last dates to be carrying off one thousand human beings daily at Constantinople; the latter is the cattle plague, said to be destroying thousands of valuable cattle. The following interesting extracts are from a carefully prepared article in The Evening Post, under the caption of "The Rinderpest"—the name, some say, the plague bears on the continent:

HISTORY OF THE CATTLE PLAGUE.

Such murrains have occurred over and over again in Europe, and an infectious distemper is supposed to prevail permanently among the vast herds which are pastured in Siberia and on the steppes of Asia. It depopulated the pasturages of the continent in the time of Theodosius; it followed Charlemagne back from Denmark, and made havoc of the French herds; it scourged Europe in the years 817, in 1223, and then again in 1625. The worst instance of all, however, occured from 1710 to 1717. On that occasion the steppe-murrain passed by way of Tartary, Russia and Poland, all over the West, and in the first three years 1,500,000 oxen perished.

In 1745 it prevailed in Zealand; in 1779 Holland lost in one year 375,441 of her horned cattle; and in 1796 it followed Napoleon into Italy, and Piedmont alone paid for his march, with 3,500,000 head. Faust, in the Famille du Cultivateur, estimates the loss to France and Belgium, between 1713 and 1796, at the enormous total of 10,000,000 animals. In 1806, when the Cossacks of the Don mustered on the Vistula, their bullocks brought the pestilence again, and Schwartzenberg's invasion of France, at the head of the allied forces, in 1813, imported it. Wherever, indeed, war has broken down the barriers of sanitary measures, the plague, if existing in the East, has forced its way; and in the Crimean campaign it thus penetrated to the cattle-pens of the French and English armies.

It is related that in 1745 the same pestilence crossed the sea in a parcel of distempered hides from Zealand, which were forbidden a salesbere, and should have been buried; but a covetous knave sold them for leather, and the plague struck the cattle and spread from Essex all over the kingdom. On that occasion it raged for twelve whole years but not till the third year did the government take up the matter so seriously as to order that every infected animal should be instantly destroyed, and in this way alone 80,000 head were killed and paid for, while at least 160,000 died of the malady.

In 1747, 40,000 perished in Nottinghamshire and Leicestershire, and 30,000 in Cheshire, within six months. Delafond computes the loss of stock by that visitation in Europe at 3,000,000.

EXTENT OF THE PRESENT EPIDEMIC.

Last year this disease was raging at the same time in Europe, at the cape of Good Hope, Natal, New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia. In Victoria, where it was very bad, the government took wholesale measures, and killed the diseased animals right and left, in addition to stringent precautions.

Still the disease spread. In South Australia the government, directly they heard the disease was in a neighboring colony, took prompt measures to stop all cattle crossing the Victorian borders. Still, like the cholera, the disease advanced, and in a few weeks penetrated hundreds of miles into the heart of the colony.

A letter from Alexandria says that "the cattle distemper raged in the country last year. In the course of a few months there died in Egypt eight hundred thousand oxen and as many sheep, goats, camels, &c. Three fourths of these animals were thrown into the Nile, whose water here is the only drink; for, with the exception of the Fountain of Moses, there is not a single spring in Egypt. In the month of October last the dogs of Damietta could cross the Nile without wetting their paws, over the bridge formed by the corpses of cattle. Agents of the Isthmus of Suez Company have assured me that they found it impossible to prevent the fellahs from choking their fresh water canal with dead animals. The Egyptian government not having itself taken measures in this respect, their authority was paralyzed, and the fellahs preferred occasionally receiving a few blows to digging a hole for the burial of animals that died of disease."

ITS INTRODUCTION INTO ENGLAND.

A correspondent of the London Times, writing from Vienna, says that about the beginning of May a great many oxen were purchased in Moravia, Bohemia and Silesia, and sent by rail to Hamburg. When the oxen were bought, the sellers were told that they were for the London market. The murrain had long been prevalent in Austria, and therefore it was not unlikely that the above-mentioned cattle introduced the malady, which the correspondent describes appear to be slightly different from the disease which has broken out in England. The disease had been very bad in England. The disease has been very bad in the vicinity of Maidenhead, and a meeting was held whereat it was determined to present petitions on the subject to the Privy Council and Lord Palmerston. The loss of the London dairymen has been estimated at $150,000. Two thousand cows perished in a single month. Arthur Helps, clerk of the Privy Council, thus describes the matter:

"There has lately appeared in some of dairies in and near London a disease among the cattle, closely analogous to if not the same as that which has of late years prevailed extensively in Russia, Austria, and the eastern parts of Europe, called the cattle plague, being a species of typhoid fever. The loss of animals caused by it in these countries has been very serious. Returns have been furnished to the office, by which it appears that in 1864, 159,476 cattle were attacked by this disease in Russia, out of which 104,714 died. It is of the first importance that all farmers, cowkeepers, or dealers in cattle, when purchasing new stock, should for several days, not less than twelve or fourteen, keep their cattle apart from the rest of their stock, until, in fact, there is room to think that the new purchases are free from all disease. If a farmer, cowkeeper or salesman should be desirous to get rid of any animals suffering from the disease in question, or even any which may have been in close contact with animals suffering from that disease, it should be impressed upon him, as a public duty, that at the present juncture he should not send them to market or other places where they would be brought into contact with other animals, but should cause them to be slaughtered at once, and thus do what he can to prevent the spreading of the disease. Peculiar attention should be paid to the cleansing of all yards, sheds and other places where cattle are kept; and this cleansing should be especially insisted upon where there has been any manifestation of the disease. These places should be disinfected by the free use of chloride of lime or other allied compounds. It is also of great importance that all diseased animals should be as quickly as possible removed to as great a distance from the healthy as circumstances will allow.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES.

The following communication has been addressed to the governments of the cattle-exporting countries in the north of Europe:

"FOREIGN OFFICE, August 5.

"MY LORD: I transmit to you herewith a copy of a letter which has been received from the Council office, urging the expediency of arrangements being made by the governments of those countries in the north of Europe in which the cattle plague exists, to insure a careful inspection at their outposts of all cattle shipped for any port of Great Britain. I have to intrust you, in accordance with the terms of this letter, to make a representation to the government, with a view to inducing them to adopt such measures as may be best fitted to prevent the export of diseased cattle from their country to Great Britain.

"I am, &c., RUSSELL."
