BUTTE MINER FILES ANSWER IN LIBEL SUIT

Court Action Result of Publication of Alleged Untruthful Story About Local Jeweler.

The Butte Miner, through its attorneys, Fred Fuller and J. L. Templeman, has filed an amended answer to the suit of Isidore Simon, 637 South Colorado street for damages in reparation for an alleged libelous news story published by the Miner July 19, 1918.

The story was about an alleged thief and burglar, called Faringer, arrested by three plainclothes men the night of July 18.

The story, according to Mr. Simon's court complaint, contained false statements reflecting on his character.

Mr. Simon is a well known jeweler of the city and is noted as the donor of the "I. Simon medals," awarded each year to winners of declamatory contests at the high school.

TIGERS TEMPERAMENTAL AS STARS OF THE CIRCUS

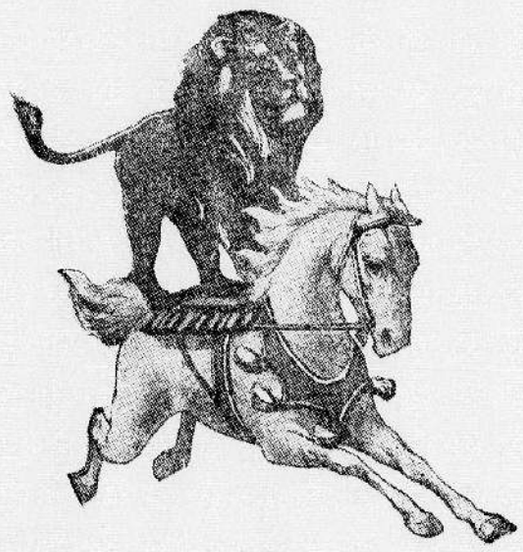
A theatrical man gazes askance at a prima donna without a temperament—if there be such an article. And Al G. Barnes wouldn't have a star tiger or puma in his circus unless the animal performer could produce indisputable evidence of periodical mental flurries.

"Alice in Jungleland," the big opening feature of Barnes' circus, which will open a day's engagement has proved to the owner of the show that a lady tiger can be just as unreasonable as an operatic star. Rehearsals for the pageant, in which all sorts of wild, semi-wild and domestic animals appear, showed it.

And you can't calm a fussy puma with a diamond tiara and a wrist watch. Not even 20 pounds of horse flesh which has been substitated for beef since war was declared, will make her understand that time is getting short and the rehearsal must proceed. You have to humor these tigers and things.

"But the animals are no good unless they're temperamental," circus men agree. "They can't get the kick into their acts.

The temperamental beasts will perform here June 18.



How Britain Maintains Slavery in Southwest Africa

Special Correspondence in NEW YORK CALL.

Cape Town, May 15, (By mail.)—There is a grim irony in the circumstance that while German Southwest Africa passes by the mandatory clause of the League of Nations under the government of the union of South Africa, on the ground—so far as any justification has been advanced—that the Germans are unfit to administer native races, representatives of the South African Native National congress should be in London at this moment petitioning the king on the subject of their harsh treatment by that very government.

"We humbly submit," say the petitioners, "that the black inhabitants of this land, who are your majesty's subjects, on account of their race, color, language and creed, live under a form of veiled slavery." The word "slavery" is apt to be abused. Is there a warrant for it in this case?

The deputation maintains there is. They realize their hopelessness. They are fully aware of the constitutional difficulties to home interference with the internal affairs of a self-governing colony. But they rightly point out that the progressive invasion of their rights, of which they complain, dates from the Act of Union in 1909, which act required and received the sanction of the imperial government, and that, consequently, the imperial government it directly concerned.

They tell us that since the Act of Union was passed in 1909 the native population is absolutely debarred from exercising any political rights. No native can sit in the house of assembly or in the senate, and in the Transvaal and Orange Free State the native is altogether excluded from the franchise. In three out of the four provinces no native can sit on the local councils.

They tell us—and we rub our eyes, wondering whether we are back again to the days when slavery flourished in the United States—about the Pass laws in the Transvaal and Orange Free State provinces; how no native can move a yard without a pass—if he leaves his town or his farm without one, he is liable to summary arrest; how he must have a "traveling pass," if he leaves his home in search of work, a "specail pass" on arrival at his destination available for six days; how, if at the end of six days he cannot find work, he is liable to imprisonment for a fortnight.

They tell us how, upon liberation, if he succeeds in getting work, he is registered in his "master's" name at the pass office, the passport being retained by the "master," he himself being provided with a "monthly pass"; how he cannot leave his "master" without a passport; how, if the parties separate at the end of the month on bad terms, the "master" can damn the man's character by writing adverse comments on the pass, which makes it impossible for him to find employment; how, if a man loses his passport, or destroys it, he is imprisoned, his finger-prints taken, and he himself branded as a criminal.

In considering their claims, we must bear in mind one other fact. During the late rebellion the natives of South Africa remained quiet. Seventeen thousand were employed in East African campaign against the Germans, many of them losing their lives; many thousands more were taken to Europe and employed in the French docks and behind the trenches in Flanders. They have been publicly thanked for their services and their loyalty by the government, by General Botha, by Sir Douglas Haig. Today they ask for justice.

STATE AUDITOR PORTER PROTECTING THE PUBLIC

State Auditor George Porter is in Butte and while here will investigate various oil promotion concerns, and those who do not come up to the requirements of the so-called "blue-sky law" will not be allowed to sell shares. To further protect the public the Bulletin does not and will not carry any oil advertisements which have not secured permits from the state auditor.

cluding those who are not members of unions, would go out on Monday in connection with the strike of electrical and telephone workers. The electricians will meet tomorrow in special meeting to consider the nation-wide strike call. It is anticipated they will vote to strike.

Local telegraphers report that the Western Union operators at Missoula went out yesterday and that in Seattle the superintendent of the Postal system was working on the wire, an evidence, they say, that the Postal company's Seattle force is running short-handed because of the strike.

Railroad operators this morning issued ultimatums to their employers refusing to accept for transmission or to receive any commercial messages emanating either from the Western Union or the Postal companies. This, it is stated, seriously cripples the wire services of the companies in all of the small towns reached by railroad in the state.

Communications received in Butte from President Konenkamp of the C. T. U. A. denied reports published in some papers that the overtures yesterday were made by the operators. The statement asserted the submission of conditions on which the strikers would go back to work for the Postal company were called forth at the specific request of the telegraph company officials and did not originate with the union.

Complaint has been made that "scab" operators still at work are using the telegraphic signatures of the striking operators in efforts to make the receiving operators believe the old men are still at work.

force peace speakers are to urge all over the country. They expect it to result in a great flood of letters, showing that the people regard the Knox resolution as a partisan attempt to destroy Wilson's influence abroad.

While the leaders on both sides sought rest in the preparation, for what promises to be the senate's most strenuous week, there was an admitted uneasiness among the democrats. Some of them frankly acknowledged that they wished Wilson would come home and personally take charge of the fight which they feel is peculiarly his.

EXPECT TO GET SCABS FROM UNITED STATES

(Special United Press Wire.)

Winnipeg, June 14.—Despite threats of railroad men to tie up train service, but little interruption to traffic is noticeable here, according to railroad officials, who said only about 40 men had quit.

The railroads believe they can replace the strikers with men from the United States, the officials said.

GROCER CHARGED; ASSAULT ON BOY

A complaint charging third degree assault has been filed by the county attorney's office against George Beckey, a south side store-keeper, who is alleged to have beaten and locked in a room a boy named Thomas Ferriter, whom, Beckey alleges, took a pound of butter from the store.
