TALK ABOUT DEADHEADS.

REMARKS OF M. W. MATHEWS, OF THE URBANA HERALD, AT A RECEPTION BY CITIZENS OF BLOOMINGTON.

After having listened to the portly President of the Association, and to the suave and handsome Snively, it would seem you would not wish to hear further from our members; but as I have been requested to bear my part, I shall, in the language of a distinguished statesman whom you all know I admire, "prove no deadhead to this enterprise." My subject, to be assured, does not apply to the people of Bloomington.

Away back in the dim and distant past, before the Illinois Press Association was organized to elevate the standard of journalism in Illinois, there was a faint suspicion existed, and it was sometimes expressed, that there were "deadheads" among the editors who presided over the press of this state. However well that suspicion may have then been founded it has no foundation to-day. Let us see for a few moments whether there are not other classes of people more liable to the charge of "deadheadism" than the journalists.

I have been a lawyer for about twenty-one years, and I know something of the habits and characteristics of that highly respectable class of our people. The princely income which awaits the newspaper man drew me partially of late years into the profession which you are honoring by your presence here to-night.

The lawyer will approach the editor (his friend, of course) and in the most confident manner imaginable, evidently believing in its truth, say: "That was a great speech of mine that I made in that case to-day, and the winning of that verdict was a marked victory." The editor answers, "Yes, I am glad to hear you did yourself credit." "Yes, it was a great success and the people will want to hear about it, and of course you will write it up with all the necessary embellishments that you know so well how to weave in. It will do me lots of good, and I shall be obliged to you for it." The editor writes it up in glowing colors, omitting to say anything of the fact that half the jury went to sleep on him, although the ethics of the profession of law does not permit the lawyer to advertise in the editor's paper. I leave it to you, which is the "deadhead" in that case, the lawyer or the editor?

Then there is the doctor who takes the editor aside and modestly (the doctors in the very nature of things are compelled to be modest) informs the editor that he has just performed a very difficult surgical operation, one that could not be performed by any other doctor in the country. "I assure you it is a very, very interesting case, and the people ought to know who it is that can perform these operations. The family unfortunately are not among the prominent people, and few will know of my unparalleled skill in surgery unless you write it up." The editor kindly gives the modest doctor a column of space, although he knows that medical ethics forbid the doctor from advertising in his newspaper; that Dr. Rauch will not permit him to advertise; that the law which seems to be Dr. Rauch (who is a law unto himself and to them) prohibits them from so doing. He cheerfully tells of the mangled anatomy of that unfortunate patient assuming its wonted shape, vigor and health, and leaves an editorial sigh as he contemplates the unpaid doctor bill that followed so closely after the end of Mary's wrestle with the measles. I leave it to you, who is the deadhead, the doctor or the editor?

Then there is the theatre and concert manager who brusquely enters the neat but not gaudy quarters of the country editor and unrolls eleven dollars' worth of press notices of the prima donna of the concert, or the star actress of the theatre company, and throws down a couple of thirty-five cent tickets and condescendingly says: "Just print these notices; scatter them around through your paper in different columns, and here—I'll just compliment your wife with seats at the entertainment. You can have them reserved if you like by paying fifteen cents extra at my box office, or at Smith's drug store, who shall be glad to see you and your wife there. Then he bows himself out with the air of a man who has conferred a great favor. The editor, who fumbles his two pasteball prizes, wonders how it is that the prime necessity, "check," is so unevenly distributed in this world. Which in this case is the deadhead?

A syndicate of you wealthy citizens form a combination or corporation to start a large manufacturing establishment in your city. The well-dressed and solid-looking member of the firm walks into the office of the editor and says: "We are starting a large establishment here, it will be of great benefit to the public, and of course you must help along such enterprise by giving us lots of printer's ink. Come down and look around about half a day and you can find information enough to fill up a couple of columns. The editor of course goes down and gives them "a boom all for the good of the public."

Then that world-renowned charity institution, the Western Union Telegraph Company, under the name of a sub-corporation, proposes to establish a telephone exchange in your town. The superintendent, that is to be, comes to the editor with honeyed words and tells of the wonderful thing it is for the public and assures the editor that the influence of himself and his paper is necessary to get enough subscribers to justify putting in the wires, etc. The editor writes up the wonderful invention liberally and gets it established, and has the blessed privilege of paying $4 a month quarterly in advance for the one through which he receives duns from his grocer and butcher. The electric light folks repeat the dose and the editor bears it with becoming patience.

But this is not all. There is going to be a church festival, and the best looking and most cultured ladies of the church are sent to see the editor. They send these because it takes that kind to successfully storm the citadel of the editor's heart. They say then: "You have never done very much for the Lord, anyhow, and we want you to print us some bills—you know how to write 'em—just get us out about 1,000 and we'll distribute them or have it done; we'll not bother you to do that, but we want you to put in a good notice or two about it. It's to get a new pipe organ, you see, and you must help us out now—of course you know we always feel like we can depend on you to furnish the printing of the bills and tickets and such like—and to give us good notices—we will send some little girls around to sell tickets; they will be fifty cents a piece for the whole bill of fare—you can get your ticket of one of the little girls as cheap as anywhere, and it encourages them you know. Come and bring your family; it will only cost you about four dollars." And the humble editor, without hope of reward in this world, and very little in the next, agrees to do the printing, and the gracefully retire and tackle the rich everyman on the corner for the donation of a dollar's worth of sugar to offset the editor's seven dollars' worth of printing.

Then there is a wedding in high life. The editor, of course, is invited because he always circulates around in those ethereal upper strata of life known as the bon ton. When he receives an invitation there is but one thing for him to do: He must rent a dress suit and go. He is expected to describe the bride as a picture of loveliness and the bridesmaids as just too sweet for any use, and so tastily dressed as to attract the attention of all. The groom must be a manly and handsome one and of one of our best families and the supper—the banquet—must be a grand success.

The whole affair must be "distinguished"—the editor will use that word if he happens to have it about him—if not, he will say it was a magnificent affair, or a "big thing," depending upon his early education and opportunities. He gets nothing for all this and two columns of space, except the nightmare. If after wrestling with it, he is sick the next day, he can get even by taking some of the patent medicines he has taken on advertisement.

I leave it to you whether the bride's father, who by the wedding saved $247 a year in millinery bills alone not to speak of $487 per month that the gas bills grew on account of the front parlor jets making extra time—is more of a deadhead than the overworked and underfed editor.

Finely a prominent citizen dies; his cold and rigid "form" is "locked" in the ice "chase" of death; mourning friends gather around the coffin and administer consolation to the weeping family—that doesn't cost anything—but the kind hearted, generous-souled editor must throw the regulation mantle of charity over his faults or donate a column or two of valuable space in giving the old man a clean proof sheet to hand St. Peter when he enters the pearly gates. Now, in the language of the poet: "Tell me, ye whited walls, ye hooded and mantled monks, ye shaven heads, tell me which of the dead and the living is the deadhead?"

What a man who has a large amount of extra posts for sale at Peck's to be sold cheap.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

A new machine, patented in Kansas, has just come in use, with a blow off and a safety valve. When the wearer sits down it will automatically locate her corsets strings and blow her bangs in the most fashionable pose. When she stands up the action tightens the strings and expands her bustle, whistles to her dog and sticks a pin into her drowsy escort.

An exchange pertinently remarks: "A country editor is one who reads newspapers, writes on any subject, sticks type, folds papers, makes up mails, runs errands, saws wood, works in the garden, is blamed for a thousand things he never even thought of, works hard all day, is subject to spring fever, helps people into office who forget all about it afterwards, and frequently gets cheated out of his earnings. He puffs up and does more to build up the town and county than any one else, the miser and foggy are equally benefited, yet will not take the paper, but will borrow it and cuss the old fool of an editor."

The Verdict Unanimous.
W. D. Sult, Druggist, Sippus, Ind. testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. I have a bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bowling Green, Ohio, affirms: "The best of all medicine I have ever handled in my 25 years' experience, is Electric Bitters. Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at Chas. A. Wells & Co's drug store."

PROBATE ORDER.
