THE APPEAL.

A TALK ABOUT THE BIG SALT WATER TELEGRAPH.

Faithfully Reported from the Household Words of Patrick and Judy Mullooney.

BY P. E. C.

Och Judy, what great things the Yankee's have done
To bate the auld boy. Arrah God knows they're able,
They've stretched a big bell tale from Sam off to John
Down in under the say, and they call it a cable,
Then the Queen goes to talk at the end o'ye see
And the words fer as fast as a shot over the Shannon
Mither President how d'ye do sit, sez, she
I'm well misses, I thank you sez Mr. Buchanan.

How are you mang, sez he, in a tone so discreet,
The mischief and nil th in his two eyes war glistening
I thought sister at last we've been makin things meet,
You'd be axing my over to see the next christening
Mither Sloth—sez the Queen, please to let me skite
Wid yer plaim, or airiest, whatever may be
Its long 'ps, you should have a wife of your own,
And I'd be the gothmother for your first baby.

That finn'd the poor divil, for s'nce that robert
He ate wid his ear to the end of the wires
Ir a petitional rattine at all round the court
He was, Hughes, here she's coming and quickly retires.
Och bother sez, Judy, you fool, and you gawk,
Truth I think it is lave as yer aimes per taking
To think capitain wires helps people to talk
When I know "twas a ropeship'd me Uncle from speakin

Talk alsey I tell ye, twas but to her day
As the President met at the end of the wire
He was thinkin to death wit a Billingsgate fray
And two Irish hawkers calliw skih other a hi-lo-lafy
Sure the Englishmen stilin upon his own ground
While his breakfast is set, by a punished up lazgney
Can an New Orleans what is cotton a pound,
Or know if Virginny has rin her tobackey.

Did'nt I spake to my sister, at home in Tralee,
Sez I Betty (come here, on the telegraph cable,
Faith I will, wan the answer, and find out for me
If the laydies wan hoops, then I'll do it I'm able;
Faroth they ware nothin else, ye may bet yer old hood,
Sez I back again in American fashion,
If that be the case ye may stay there yr bride,
And I'll stay here, sez she, in a murtherin passt n.

Now the divil a letter at all we need write,
But save many a farginee, in pins, ink, and paper,
If the boys has a carimnagy, we'll hear on the light
Thro' this pocket concerne, and 'tis better and cheaper
Sez Judy could I believe half what you say,
Troth I'd wind for my mother, poor disinsle crather,
Then robbin shipmasters, will are too much pay
And there's not in their crews, half an onnce of good nayther. [East Judy.

[PATY SOLUS.]

Bad luck to thim wires, and the murdherin knaves
That first thought about such a divile invention,
It's a poor divil sure has bad wife and babies
They will tell all about him, to be of a mouthfun;
Now there's Biddy Magra, the first wife that I had,
If she knew I'd another, Mick Finnegans dauther,
Troth her tongue would be like a bell clapper gone mad
Bingin over a pale to me under the wather.

HUNTSVILLE, August, 1858.

The Broker and the Banker—A Wildcat Bank President Forced into Liquidation.

Some weeks since an itinerant broker, among other notes purchased about the country, had a lot of bills of a wildcat Nebraska bank, which "broke" before he had an opportunity to dispose of them at any price. They were nearly a dead loss, as he could not obtain more than fifteen cents on the dollar for them. How to come out without any serious loss—which had always been the broker's study when he happened upon a bad bargain—became the question with the man of money. He had some $500 on the Nebraska rag-mill, which had cost him seventy-five to eighty cents, and he thought he could buy some $1,500 more, at ten or fifteen cents, and trust to luck to make the owner of the concern, a wealthy resident of Indiana, redeem the entire amount, he would do well.

The idea formed, the broker set about putting it in execution. In the regular prosecution of his business he soon purchased the amount, making his entire sum average him about twenty-five cents to the dollar, and departed for Indiana to find the late President of the exploded institution, who, the broker knew, was worth at least $250,000, realized by dishonest banking. Greatly to the broker's disappointment, the banker had departed the day before for the East, in company with his wife. The great object, then, was to overtake the financier and force him into a settlement. No time was to be wasted. The broker heard the route the banker had taken, and determined to follow him.

On reaching this city, he learned that the man of whom he was in pursuit, was at the ——— House. As fast as a hack could convey him, he went to the hotel; inquired for Mr. ———, and was told he had just left in the omnibus for the Little Miami cars. The broker was on the point of despairing; but he walked to the private entrance, and perceived the banker, whom he knew by sight, seated in the omnibus, which was just about to drive off.

The broker requested the driver to wait a moment, and stepping to the side of the omnibus where the banker was sitting, said he wished to see him very particularly, and that he would detain him but a minute. The banker, never dreaming of the nature of the business, jumped out and went with the broker into the anti-room adjoining the hall. The broker told him in very few words that he had $2,000 of his money, and that he wanted other funds for it at once. The banker told the broker he had nothing to do with that bank; that he had merely been one of its officers. "There is no use," replied the fellow with the $2,000 of Nebraska, "arguing the matter; neither you nor I have time to spare. I have got your bill, and that the $150,000 lost by the community you made; and if you don't pay me $2,000 in good bank notes for this pile, (producing a pistol,) I'll make your wife a widow in fifteen seconds! (pulling out a watch and regarding its dial) by all my hopes of Heaven."

It was a singular picture, the broker and the banker—the one smiling complacently, and the other blanching with fear. Not a word was spoken. The second hand of the watch pursued its tithe, the seconds went by. Nine had passed, when the banker said, "I will do it," and produce a draft for $2,000 on New York, which he endorsed with a pen lying on the table, and handed it over. The package of Nebraska stuff—darted out of the door—was in the omnibus in a moment, and away.

The transaction occupied but two minutes in all, and the broker, by his coolness and assurance, made $1,500 clear. No doubt the two were even with either, but one played his cards better, and won without trouble a little of the other's ill-gotten gains.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Girard, the Money-Maker.

A recent number of the "Household Words" contains a sketch of STEPHEN GIRARD. The Philadelphia Inquirer says it is not correct in all particulars, and yet it embodies many interesting facts in the history of the celebrated banker. After giving the leading events in the early life of GIRARD, the writer proceeds as follows:

In 1812, Stephen Girard, the one-eyed cabin boy of Bordeaux, purchased the banking premises of the Old Bank of the United States, (whose charter was not renewed,) and started the Girard Bank, a large private establishment, which not only conferred advantages on the community greater than the State institution upon which it was founded, but, while the public credit was shaken, and the Government finances were exhausted by war, the Girard Bank could command large subscriptions of loan, and put itself in the position of the principal creditor of the country. In 1814 Girard subscribed the whole of a large government loan from patriotic motives, and in 1817 he contributed by his unshaken credit and undiminished funds to bring about the resumption of specie payments. In 1831 his operations were so extensive that when the country was placed in extreme embarrassment from the scarcity of money by reason of the balance of trade being against it, he was enabled, by a single transaction with an eminent English firm, to turn the exchanges and cause specie to flow into the States.

To add to the singular and decisive character, he was deaf in one ear, could only speak broken English, never conversed upon anything but business, and wore the same old coat, cut in the French style, for five years together. An old rickety chair, remarkable for its age, and marked with the initials "S. G.," drawn by a faded horse, was used when he rode about the city. He had no sense of hospitality, no friend to share his house or his table. He was deferential in appearance to each of his family; violent and passionate only to one man—an old and faithful clerk named Rybergat. His theological opinions were heterodox in the extreme, and he loaded the same him splendid rewards after Voltaire and Rousseau. He was devoted to the improvement of his adopted city and country; he was a determined follower of ostentatious charity. No man ever applied to him for a large public grant in vain, while the smallest beggar was invariably sent from his gate. He steadily rose every morning before the lark, and unceasing labor was the daily worship of his life.

Stephen Girard began his remarkable trading career with one object, which he steadily kept in view all his long life—the making of money for the power it conferred. He was content, at starting, with the small profits of the retail trader, willing to labor for years in order to make these profits secure. He practiced the most rigid personal economy; he resisted all the allurements of pleasure, he exacted the last farthing that was due him; and he paid the last farthing that the owed. He took every advantage the law allowed him in resisting a claim; he used men just so far as they would accomplish his purpose; he paid his servants no more than the market price; when a faithful cashier died, he exhibited the utmost indifference, making no provision for his family, and uttering no sentiment of regret for his loss. He would higgle for a penny with a huckster in the streets; he would deny the watchman at his bank the customary present of a gratuity. Thus he attained his eighty-second year. In 1830, he nearly lost the sight of his one eye, and used to be seen groping about his bank, disregarding every offer of assistance. Crossing one of the Philadelphia roads he was knocked down by a passing wagon, his face bruised, and his right ear was nearly cut off. His one eye, which before opened slightly, was now entirely closed; he gradually yielded away and his health declined. On the 26 of December, Stephen Girard expired in a back room, on the third floor of his house, in Water street, Philadelphia, leaving the bulk of his large fortune, upwards of a million sterling, to found charities, and to benefit the city and the country in which he had acquired it.

He left his monument in the "Girard College," that marble-roofed palace for the education and protection of the orphan children of the poor, which stands the most perfect model of architecture in the New World, high above the buildings of Philadelphia, visible from every eminence of the surrounding country. Every detail of the external and internal arrangement of this Orphan College was set forth in the will, and carefully in his will; showing that the design upon which he had lavished the mass of his wealth was not the hastily developed fancy of a few hours or days, but was the heart-cherished, silent project of his whole life.

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN WAITING HIS TURN AT A WASH-BOWL.—On Saturday last, President Buchanan arrived at the Relay House, or Washington Junction, as it is more properly called, en route for Washington City. On passing into the bar-room, the President threw off his coat and his white neckcloth, carelessly pitching them over a chair, opened his shirt-collar, and tucked up his sleeves for a wash, convenience for this purpose being in the apartment. At the time, however, both basins were occupied by two young men, neither of whom seemed to be aware the President was about. He waited patiently some time, when some one spoke and invited him up stairs. He declined, however, quietly remarking that he could "wait for his turn." And as soon as the basins were vacated he "took his turn" in a jolly good wash in the public bar-room. At about this time a person who had come into the room, sung out pretty near to him, "Look here, I thought the old Prez. was to be here to-day—" The speech was cut short by a nudge, while a momentary comical expression passed across the face of that same "Old Prez." A cigar was handed to him by a friend; he took a good satisfying drink of—not "old rye," but tea-water, and barely fired up the cigar, when the bell rung, and "all aboard!" summoned the Chief Magistrate of the United States to his seat in the cars, and away they went to Washington.

A T the solicitation of friends and patrons, I have decided to establish a Family School, or a limited number of Boys of all ages under sixteen, and it is the intention to make it, in the best sense, a home school, a nursery for thoroughly drilling lads in the

English Branches, Classics, Mathematics, AND Modern Languages,

Preparatory to entering College. The private family of a gentleman of the highest character, and in all those qualities unavoidable in the larger and professional schools. It is the school for lads away from the parental roof, who prefer the comforts of home, the family of the company and companionship of a teacher, whose duty and whose interest it is to care for them, and to be to them in the place of their parents; no effort is so well calculated to develope the mental, moral and physical powers of a boy as this system. Lads in this vicinity, whose sons has been purchased with ample buildings all new and constructed according to the latest and most approved models, and furnished with every comfort, and as to be in readiness by the opening of the School.

Cheap Plantation for Sale.

I OFFER my plantation for sale, lying three miles northwest of LaGrange, Tenn., containing Eight Hundred and Nineteen Acres, (819.) This place was formerly owned by Capt. Thos. J. Polk, and at present is rented by Mr. N. H. Collard. It is now in a high state of cultivation, and is adapted to the production of all kind of grain usually grown, and easily cultivated into one of the best valuable stock farms in the south, being divided into four large fields. The improvements are comfortable; the dwelling house is of log, and has four large rooms and passages; there are twenty-five hands, twenty cribs, stables, and all other necessary buildings; a good well of water, and the premises are healthy as any in the country. This is one of the most commanding and beautiful sites to build a fine house in the county, being elevated and surrounded by a beautiful country. The purchaser will be convenient to both the male and female colleges in LaGrange, and can save the expense of sending his children to the boarding schools, by keeping their company at home. I have more land than I can cultivate which is the only reason for selling. Any one wishing a farm in land can not do better in West Tennessee. Call and examine the land as I am determined to sell. I can be found at my residence, one mile north of LaGrange, and will take pleasure in showing it to any one wishing to purchase.

VALUABLE Lands and City Property for sale on easy terms. Three farms, situated in Crittenden county, improved. One two miles from Mound City, or seven miles from Memphis, containing 750 acres on the Hollow Road—one nine miles from Memphis, four miles from the Mississippi river, containing 1,000 acres, improved—one seven miles from the Mississippi river, fourteen and one-half miles from Memphis, well improved. The above three tracts of land are well timbered, and are three tracts in the whole State of Arkansas, and two of them have been entirely above overflow, and on the third one 1,000 acres have been above every overflow during the long progress of the late flood in the Mississippi Valley. These lands are unquestionably safe from all encumbrances by overflow, and purchasers are invited to call and examine for themselves while the water markers speak so that they may not be deceived as to what they are buying. Also two family residences and eleven vacant lots in the city of Memphis, and $25,000 worth second hand Cotton Gins, all of which will be sold on the crossing of the Memphis and Charleston and Mobile and Ohio roads.

Also nine improved lots in Salisbury, Tenn.; also a small plantation one-half mile from Mt. Pleasant depot on the Charleston Railroad; also one three acre lot and one building lot, fronting on Adams street; also a plantation of 811 acres, at Scotts depot, on the Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad, in DeSoto county, Miss. On this tract is a plantation of 300 acres, well improved, containing nine fronting on the depot; also 1,646 acre tract on the Tanso river, 200 acres deadened fronting the river on Hunter's Island; also 30,000 acres of Texas Lands, consisting of wild land, many tracts of which have proved them selves above the recent flood in Texas. Also a plantation far east for the Mississippi river to have its full effect on them; also 20,000 acres of select lands in Gritteden and Mississippi counties in Arkansas, as many tracts of which are entirely above the recent high water. Several tracts of the above have deadenings, varying in size from 50 to 500 acres, in place; also quite a number of other lands, both in hilly and river country, too tedious to mention.

Any person desiring to see me in regard to any of the above property can do so by calling at my office, up stairs, over the store of Messrs. Coppedge & Bro., on Main, between Court and Madison streets, on Front Row, or any information in regard to any of the above property can be obtained by addressing the undersigned, and the property will be shown to any one who may desire to examine it.

A Good Investment.

I WISH to dispose of one-half of the UNION FOUNDERY in one which is well qualified to take charge of the business and relieve me from the care and responsibility of the concern. It has a good run of custom and is making money. I only want a partner for the purposes above stated, as I desire to devote my time to other business.

Any business man wishing to engage in the foundery business could not do better than to take an interest in this concern.

I will expect the purchaser to put in an equal capital with myself.

By calling at the office of the foundry on Poplar street, I will make a fair exhibit of the business. If not satisfactory, of course, I would not expect any one to take an interest. W. C. BRADFORD, Proprietor.
