THE DAILY APPEAL.

FRIDAY.....SEPTEMBER 24, 1858.

Governor Jones' Speech—His Reception at the Illinois Capital.

From the Springfield Register.

Yesterday the distinguished ex-Governor of Tennessee, Hon. James C. Jones, arrived in our city by the one o'clock train, from St. Louis. We had been apprised of his coming but a few days before, and of his intention to address the people here upon the political topics of the day. He was met at the cars by a numerous committee, composed chiefly of his Old Line Whigs of our city and county, and escorted to the State House, where he was advertised to speak at one o'clock. Notwithstanding the brief notice there were large numbers of our county citizens here to hear their distinguished visitor, who, with our own towns people, filled the large Hall of Representatives to overflowing. Gov. Jones was introduced to the audience by Mr. B. S. Edwards, one of his compeers of the Clay-Whig line, who briefly alluded to the Governor's political history, his former position as one of the chiefs of the old Whig guard, and his present position as a public man upon the questions of the day.

We regret that we were not enabled to get a full report of the eloquent and forcible address of the distinguished Tennessean, whose claim cross, in times past, has been so successful in rallying the Whig hosts of his own and other States, upon the old issues. We can, therefore, give an outline of his remarks only.

He commenced by an allusion to the charge made against him for interfering in our political contest, and showed that the questions at issue in this canvass were not local but national—that as a citizen of the United States, he had an interest in the result, that justified his coming among us and proclaiming his views. He came at the earnest solicitation of old political friends, not because he felt any interest in the controversy between Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Douglas, although he thought that if there ever had been any occasion for such controversy, that it existed no longer—but for his part he was willing to apply the principles of the Kansas-Nebraska act to them, and allow them to be perfectly free to "determine their domestic matters for themselves."

In eloquent and glowing terms, he alluded to his past identification with the old Whig party, and his steadfast adherence to that party so long as it continued—that after mature and deliberate reflection, while part of that party had joined the American and part the Republican parties, he could not conscientiously go with either, but felt constrained to act with the Democratic as the conservative and national party of the Union.

He had always been, from his tender years, a Whig at heart, and always a Whig from principle and affection, a devoted friend of Mr. Clay during all his life, had closed his eyes in death, and followed him to the grave—that his sincere conviction was that if Mr. Clay were alive he would be found in the least responsible among its supporters, for the defects which it embodies. One of these defects has since been partially corrected by the Dred Scott decision. Senator Douglas has not hesitated immediately to indorse that decision. And now he boldly points out the fact that the relief so not yet totally corrected. He refuses, in an open and manly spirit, to lull the friends of constitutional right into a false security. His explanations point out the undeniable fact that something more must be done, before a Southern man can find entire security for his property in our common territories.

What Southern man is doing more than this for the sake of the Constitutional rights of the South? He tells us that he has not yet been challenged to a duel, and he says he feels that if he is to Please," is his motto.
