THE APPEAL.

THE FARMER.

The following old poem, translated from the Latin, and will do as early as 1809, by Thomas Makin, is now the theme for wear:

The farmer, prudent, antitable case,
For winter, like the prudent ant, prepares;
Foreknowing that all that summer doth produce
Is only for nourishing winter's use;

He fills his barns and cellars with good cheer
Against the dreary season of the year;
He stores ready food and gaudy cross,
Content to live at homely ease in peace.

Sweet to the taste are unbought dainties are,
And his own homespun he delights to wear;
His lowly dwelling views his large domain,
Improved in park, wide pasture and gaudy grain.

Plain furniture, but neat, he doth choose,
And wisely values everything for use;
Of these blest shadows may I delight to be,
Here little is enough, with peace, for me.

Our Artesian Well—Its Medicinal Properties.

From the Louisville Courier-J.

Artesian wells are so named from Artesium, the ancient name of Artois, a province of France. They were successfully bored in that country at an early period, and hence took the name of this province.

These wells were known in ancient times, as we find accounts of them by classic authors. That strange people, the Chinese, who are far behind us in civilization, bored wells, lined and printed with blocks of wood long before we thought of either of these arts. It is not our purpose, however, to enter into a history of these wells. The subject is interesting, but we have not the time nor space to do it justice at present.

The deepest artesian well in the world is that at St. Louis, bored by Messrs. Belcher for their sugar refinery. It is 2,199 feet in depth. The next deepest is the one in Louisville, bored by the Messrs. Dupont to supply their paper mill with water. It is 2,086 feet in depth. Both of these wells were the result of private enterprise, and they exceed any in the world which government has undertaken. The third deepest is at Kissingen, in Bavaria, 1,878 feet, and the fourth at Grenelle, near Paris, 1,806 feet. There are but few others known that go much deeper than those which have been sunk in the great desert of Sahara.

But it is with the well in our own city that we are concerned at present. It is the greatest curiosity in Louisville. It will repay a visit, whether to be viewed with the eye of science or that of curiosity in search of sights. The water, now thrown out in a beautiful jet, comes from a distance of 2,086 feet, in the bowels of the earth, and the force necessary to raise a perpendicular column of fluid that size is wonderfully great. A subterranean sea at that depth, with no vent but that of the orifice of this well, 2,086 feet above, with the column of water weighing upon it, would receive a pressure sufficient to heave up the superincumbent earth, and scatter its fragments to the winds above.

The Messrs. Dupont undertook this as a private enterprise, to supply their paper-mill with water. It seems, however, that the water may be more valuable for medical purposes than for making paper. It has been thoroughly analyzed by Prof. J. Lawrence Smith, of the University of Louisville, whose reputation as a chemist needs no indorsement from us. We gave this analysis in our issue of Wednesday, but it will bear repetition here:

SOLID SUBSTANCES IN ONE GALLON

	Grains
Chloride sodium	621.5204
" calcium	65.7287
" magnesium	7.2119
" potassium	4.2216
" aluminum	14.7737
Sulphate soda	72.2957
" lime	29.4342
" magnesia	8.8012
" alumina	17.3282
" potash	3.2.48
Bi carbonate soda	2.7264
" lime	5.9915
" magnesia	2.7358
" iron	1.3518
Phosphate soda	1.5415
Iodide magnesium	.3547
Bromide magnesium	.4659
Silica	.1857
Organic matter	.7682

GASES

Sulphuretted hydrogen	2.0050
Carbonic acid	6.1720
Nitrogen	1.3980

The above analysis shows that the water of this well is similar to that of the celebrated beats of Kissingen, in Bavaria, whose medicinal properties are celebrated all over the world. More than half a million bottles of the Kissingen water are sent each year to the accredited agents everywhere. Such is the fact, the Messrs. Dupont ought to be prevailed upon to bore this well no deeper, for fear of losing this stream. It may be worth much more for healing the sick than for making paper. We trust that the invalids, who come for their mill, they will bore another well, and leave this one until experience teaches how many of the ills that flesh is heir to it will cure.

We have kept a record of the different strata through which the auger has gone in reaching this great depth, but Mr. Kelling, the superintendent of the mill, has kept a more accurate one, and we understand that Prof. Smith is now making a scientific report upon the subject. We shall not do more at present, therefore, than to enumerate the penetrated strata according to the popular names. When Prof. Smith's report comes out we may recur to the subject again.

The boring of the well began on the 1st of April, 1857. The first 76 feet passed through the sand and gravel upon which our city rests. Then solid rock was struck, and the auger advanced through the following formations according to the depths affixed:

Gray limestone,	100 feet
Dark shale,	12 "
Gray limestone,	52 "
Red marl,	5 "
Gray limestone,	81 "
Shale,	157 "
Dark limestone,	149 "
Green soft shale,	13 "
Blue limestone,	207 "
Blue limestone mixed with shale,	33 "
Gray limestone,	94 "
Gray limestone, with slate,	26 "
Light gray limestone, very hard,	40 "
White clay,	1 "
Gray limestone,	546 "
Sand stone,	41 "
White marble,	4 "
Sand stone,	19 "
Sand stone mixed with light shale,	20 "

At this point, a depth of 1,637 feet, the first water was penetrated that rose to the orifice of the well. This water was not satisfactory and the boring was resumed. In going the remaining distance of 458 feet through limestone, with occasional interruptions as above, several different streams of water were struck. At a depth of 1,879 feet a more powerful stream flowed, and at a depth of 1,930 feet sulphur water rose considerably above the mouth of the well. After this depth was reached, every accession of ten feet added to the strength of water, until a depth of 2 036 feet was attained. At this point, the present stream of water, throwing out 225 gallons per minute, or 324,000 gallons per day, was reached. The force of this stream is such with an inch nozzle the water is thrown to the height of 60 feet above the surface of the earth.

We shall recur to the subject again, when Professor Smith's report is furnished, in the meantime, those who can, let them go and wonder fed in both art and nature, can visit this well, and think of the mysterious realm, deep down in the bowels of the earth, which thus sends up its kind waters as a physician to heal the maladies. Let us, however, forget that this great work was undertaken and prosecuted by individuals with their own private means; and if the medicinal properties of these waters are to prove, what it is probable they will, the Messrs. Dupont, proprietors, and Mr. Kelling, the superintendent, and Mr. Blake, the foreman of the works, will seem and all be remembered as benefactors of our race, rather than as individual undertakers of a mammoth enterprise for private gain.

HOOP ITEMS.—One of the drollest stories in the late foreign papers is one to the effect that the managers of Belgian balls and Belgian ladies of Belgian ball rooms, having found to their grief, that the vast circumferences of crinolines have diminished the number of dancers, and that ladies doing their chances to dance are consequently very small, had ceased frequenting ball rooms, had reduced the size of hoops. This they effected by charging an extra additional fee for ladies whose skirts went beyond a certain mark, and this mark is determined by a crinoline-metre. "At a ball given on Sunday, 22d, at Montigny, one female was measured and charged an extra 25 centimes; another person, of an economic disposition, preferred reducing her crinoline by taking out two hoops."

But let no one imagine that crinoline-metres and crinoline-laws will ever reduce the article in this country. Not a bit of it. Let them try it and then they will begin to expand. There will be a certain glory in going up to the top figure of the metre, which no one in this aspiring, ambitious, daring, heading country can resist. It has been poetically said that the different varieties of metre are long metre, short metre, gas metre and member-by-moonlight alone. To these we may now add crinoli-metre—but that it has anything in common with the others. Certainly it has nothing to do with the last, for the idea of meeting any lady by moonlight when it is not possible to come within six feet of her, is a mere mockery.

And they are expanding. About a week ago a young lady in a car near Boston, having perhaps heard, turned the back of the seat before her, and down in a vast sea of flowing muslin, frilling four places, and looking in it like a mermaid waist deep in an ocean of skirt. The conductor came along and cast a note appealing glance at the extraordinary amount of "continuity." She understood the glance and asked the price of a seat. "Ten cents." "Well then," she replied, with exquisite calmness, "I will take four places. Here are forty cents." And serilly she needed them, all to keep unrumpled.

We have already pointed out the advantages resulting from crinoline. It frees woman from a needless weight of skirts, it strengthens the opinion by expansive to solid, and aids manufactures, stimulates the whale fishery, improves figures, displays ankles to a delirious extent in getting up skirts, and gives editors subjects for articles. All things considered, we see no great reason to grieve over the institution. It is not every fashion which develops so much or such varied industry as crinoline.—Philadelphia Paper.

☞ The Bristol News says the great increase in the receipts of the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad shows that the travelling public are already aware of the great advantages of the central route. The following statement of the receipts from passengers for the two years, shows a highly encouraging prospect:
