THE APPEAL.

THE PATH THROUGH THE CORN.

Wary and bright in the summer air—
Like a quiet sea when the wind blows fair,
And its roughest breath has scarcely curled
The green highway to an unknown world—
Soft whispers passing from shore to shore,
Lake a boat content—yet daring more!
Who feels fortune,
Wandering thus on the path through the corn?

A short space since, and the dead leaves lay
Crisping under the hedgerow grass;
Not hum of insect, nor voice of bird
O'er the desolate field was ever heard;
Only at eve the pallid moon
Blushed rosy—if in the red sun-glow!
Yet now blessed earth,
Shut up into life the young green corn.

Small and feable, slender and pale,
It bent its head to the white rain,
Mourned the wrinkled note of chore,
Sorrowed in listening sighs was heard;
Saw chestnuts bud out, and champicots blow,
And saloons mimic the vast had show,
Where it was born.
On either side of the path through the corn.

The corn—the corn—the beautiful corn
Rising wonderful, meen by meen,
Fairer, nearer as fair as a fairy's wand,
Then, just in reach of a child's wee hand,
Then growing, growing, and growing strong,
With the welcome of the harvest in its song,
While in tuft soars
The rich crimson tip of the murmuring corn.

Oh, strange, sweet path, formed day by day,
How, when and wherefore, strange path, I say,
No more than life's strange path we know,
Whither they lead us or why we go,
Or whether our eyes shall ever see
The wheat in the ear or the fruit on the tree,
Yet—who is forlorn?
Heaven, that watered the furrows, will ripen the corn.

How they Gambled in the Days of Our Grandfathers.

From Massey's England during the reign of George III.] The vice which, above all others, infected English society during the greater part of the eighteenth century, was gaming. Men and women, the old and the young, beaux and statesmen, poets and apprentices, the learned and polite, as well as the ignorant and vulgar, were alike involved in the vortex of the play. Horse-racing, cock-fighting, betting of every description, with the ordinary resources of cards and dice, were the chief employment of many, and were tempted with more or less by almost every person in the higher ranks of life. The proprietary clubs—White's, Brooks', Boodle's—were originally instituted to evade the statute against public gaming-houses. Large halls and rooms have had not yet come into vogue. A ball seldom consisted of more than ten or twelve couples, and the practice of collecting a crowd of fine people to do nothing is an invention of recent date.

When a lady received company, card tables were provided for all the guests; and even where there was dancing, cards formed the principal part of the entertainment. Games of skill were seldom played. Brag, crim, basset, ombre, lansett, commerce, spadille—the very names of which are hardly known to the present generation—furnished the excitement of play and enabled people of fashion to win and lose their money without mental effort. Whist was not much in vogue until a later period, and was far too abstruse and slow to suit the depraved taste which required unadulterated stimulants. The ordinary stakes at these mixed assemblies would, at the present day, be considered high, even at clubs where a rubber is still allowed. The consequences of such gaming were often still more lamentable than those which usually attend such practices. It would happen that a lady lost more than she would venture to confess to a husband or father.

Her creditor was probably a fine gentleman, or she became indebted to some rich admirer for the means of discharging her liabilities. In either event, the result may be guessed. In the one case, the debt of honor was liquidated on the old principle of the law merchants, according to which there was but one alternative to payment in purse. In the other, there was likewise but one method in which the acknowledgement of obligation by a fine woman would be acceptable to a man of the world.

Democracy as Understood in New England.

A journal published in New Hampshire, called the Charleston Standard, which is, we learn from the States, edited by Edmund Burke, a Democratic politician of eminence, thus expounds the public sentiment in New England:

"We are the Democracy of Maine fighting the late battle on Douglas grounds. At the beginning of the contest, the Eastern Argus, controlled by Mr. Appleton, Assistant Secretary of State, and the President's confidential friend, in a long editorial, recognized the correctness of the course of Douglas, and assumed that there was no real difference between him and the Democratic party. And, upon that ground, so far as we have observed the course of the Democratic press of Maine, the late battle was fought.

"And again, in the State, the New Hampshire Patriot, selected by Mr. Appleton as publisher of the laws, takes no decided position against Douglas, and all its echoes, claiming to be the only orthodox Democratic journals in the State, with the exception of the Union Democrat at Manchester, are out openly and boldly for Douglas.

"We cordially believe that three-fourths, at least, of the Democratic party of the North are at heart with him."

We suppose that such statements are made upon good authority. With us here, looking at the issue made in the present canvass in Illinois, we cannot doubt which side every friend to the Union and Constitution ought to take. Mr. Douglas is making the fight against Black Republicans. If he does not triumph, that will. The path of duty seems to our mind too clear for doubt. Hence, we have been disposed, not to throw any obstacles in his way, but to cheer him onward. Probably, abroad, the opponents of Black Republicanism see this particular issue in the same light we do."—St Louis Republican.

☞ A lady sent her servant (we will not mention where he came from) for a pattern velvet mantilla which was at her dressmaker's.

"John," she said, "if it rains take a coach; I had rather pay the hack-hire than have my mantilla wet."

When the maid handed her the mantilla it was raised, the paper which covered it being saturated with water.

"Why, John," she said, "I told you to take a cab if it rained."

"So I did, mum; but sure, you wouldn't have your footman a ridin' inside. I got on the box with the driver."

A PRESENT FOR VICTORIA.—A natural curiosity is on exhibition in Boston, which is intended as a present to Queen Victoria. It is a block of New Hampshire granite, bearing on its surface the exact resemblance of a top-part of a tree, or shrub, all the branches of the follage being clearly and perfectly visible. It is supposed the sprig or branch of a tree accidentally fell into a crevice in the rock, which afterwards, by the action of the frost, closed up, and in course of time the fresh, green bough became petrified into a solid rock.

Cheap Plantation for Sale.

I OFFER my plantation for sale, lying three miles northwest of LaGrange, Tenn., containing Eight Hundred and Nineteen Acres, (819.) This place was formerly owned by Capt. Thos. H. Polk, and at present is rented to Col. W. M. Cotlard. It is now in a high state of cultivation, well adapted to the production of cotton and all kind of grain usually grown, and could easily be converted into one of the most valuable stock farms in the west, being divided into four large fields. The improvements are good, the dwelling house is of log, and has four large rooms; cabins (comfortable) for twenty or thirty negroes, corn cribs, stables, and all other necessary buildings; a good well of water, and one of the best selections of fruit in the country. This is one of the most commanding and beautiful sites to build a fine house in the county, being high and elevated and surrounded by a beautiful grove. The purchaser will be conveniently to both the female colleges in LaGrange, and can save the expense of boarding his children as well as having the pleasure of their company at home. I have more land than I can cultivate which is the only inducement to sell. Any one wishing a bargain in land can not do better in West Tennessee. Call and examine the land as I am determined to sell. I can be found at my residence three miles north of LaGrange, and will take pleasure in showing it to any one wishing to purchase.
