STATE OF TENNESSEE, DAVIDSON COUNTY.

C. J. Johnson, the President of the Bank of Tennessee, makes oath that the accompanying statement is true, as the officers of the Bank and Branches, he believes, to be correct. Sworn to and subscribed before me on the 19th day of October, 1858. JOSIAH FERGUSON, J. P.

BANK OF TENNESSEE, Oct. 20, 1858.

To the Comptroller of the Treasury:

SIR—In compliance with the act of the General Assembly, at its last session, I enclose you a statement of the condition of the Bank of Tennessee on the 1st of October, the end of the first quarter of the Bank year.

In doing so, I think it my duty to accompany it with a brief representation of the conduct and policy adopted by its Directors, that its operations may be better and more readily understood. The suspension of specie payments by the Bank in October last, at this time needs no vindication. The causes which led to that event are now known to have been general, extending over the United States as well as all other commercial edifices, and may be properly traced to an undue expansion of the commerce and trade of the country. The expansion of the banks in the different States, may have had much influence in producing it. But whatever that influence may have been, it cannot in the slightest degree be traced to the Bank of Tennessee.

For some years before, its circulation has been at no time so expanded as to excite overtrading or encourage the spirit of wild and hazardous speculation nor has it on the other hand been so reduced as to harrass and oppress its debtors. The circulation had averaged about two millions upon a specie basis of about half that sum.

The statement now presented together with those sent to the General Assembly at its last session, which were carefully examined by a committee composed of a majority of the decided opponents of the bank, abundantly prove that it has at all times been kept within reasonable bounds, avoiding extremes on either side, and affording to the people a currency as sound and uniform as the circumstances and business of the country would permit, and at the same time using all its means to keep the exchanges within reasonable and proper limits, at no time exceeding one per cent. premium, and most of the time half that amount.

When the suspension was ordered by the Directors, they determined that it should not be made a pretext for enlarging its business or increasing its circulation, and that its discounts should be limited by its collections; by so doing, its paper circulation was kept about the same amount which seemed to be as necessary for the interest and accommodation of the people as of the bank and the bank itself in a condition to resume the payment of specie whenever the interests of the country required it.

The course adopted by the bank was indirectly approved by the General Assembly, when it directed that the Bank should not be compelled to resume before the first of December, evidently intending to favor the banks and the debtors, by enabling them to obtain the benefit of the present crops for the payment of their debts; at the same time imposing on them severe restrictions in the management of their business, and the heaviest penalties for a violation of them—these were obligatory upon the Bank of Tennessee, and required the utmost caution in its management to avoid a forfeiture of its charter. Acting in accordance with the supposed policy of the General Assembly, the Bank of Tennessee afforded every aid to its debtors, consistent with its safety, by extending the time of payment on their bills and renewing their notes in all such cases as seemed to require it. The statement exhibits but a moderate reduction in the line of discounts since July last, less than one hundred thousand dollars on its notes and still less on its bills.

The principal stock banks having refused to accept the provisions of the late act of the General Assembly, and claiming to be exempt from its penalties as a violation of their chartered rights, adopted a different policy from that of the Bank of Tennessee, and determined to resume the payment of specie four months in advance of the time indicated by the legislature, which necessarily required a still further reduction of the paper currency and a more rigid collection of their debts. In self defense the Bank of Tennessee was forced to adopt a similar policy of collection and withholding their usual accommodations. It furnished additional grounds to those opposed to all banks for assailing the Bank of Tennessee. It was denounced as a rotten, unsafe and unworthy of public confidence; and for some time the Planters' Bank refused to receive its paper. These attacks upon it have continued from time to time, regardless of the great interests of the State to its preservation and proper management, and without any foundation in truth; and after the sworn statements of its officers had been published and verified by an examination of the Legislative committee, and with a full knowledge that the State stood pledged for the payment of its liabilities, as if it was the settled purpose of its assailants by destroying public confidence, to produce the ruin which they had predicted. To such an extent was the public confidence impaired, particularly in the adjoining States where it enjoyed a very large circulation, that $817,995 of its notes were returned for redemption, to the Principal bank in Nashville, between the 1st July and the 1st October; they were paid and now remain in the vault of the Bank.

Under such circumstances, the branches finding no business could be safely done by discounts for the borrowers, and doubtful their ability to meet all demands against them, in August voluntarily resumed the payment of specie, and have since continued it. The principal bank at Nashville having but a small circulation, at no time, even during the suspension, refused payment in gold of any demand made upon it.

The resumption of specie payments by the branches in advance of the time selected by the General Assembly, was made from a thorough conviction that less evil would result from it to the bank and the people, than from a postponement until November. It would afford, also, a satisfactory answer to the unscrupulous assaults made upon the banks by its assailants. It would restore public confidence in its ability to meet all demands, and it might enable them the earlier to resume their legitimate and customary business.

The discredit thus brought on the bank, together with the policy pursued by most of the stock and free banks, of returning its notes for redemption from all parts of the State, have prevented it from generally accomodating the to the extent it had formerly done, which was greatly desired by its Directors, and so much needed by the community; whilst this want of confidence continues and its notes put in circulation in any part of the State will be of course returned by some banker or broker for payment, it must be apparent to every one, that but little business can be done other than collecting their debts and redeeming their notes, and that the profits of the bank must be greatly reduced.

Many of the evils to which the State has been subjected from a want of uniformity and regularity in its paper circulation has grown out of the unwise organization of the three old banks, and the competition in business and for public favor which necessarily result from it.

When it was ascertained that the United States Bank could not be re-chartered, it was apprehended that there would be a deficiency of paper circulation, and the Union Bank was chartered to supply its place, and the State became a partner, subscribing half a million of dollars; complaints soon arose that it was under the control of a few favorites, who managed it for their own advantage, and the next session of the Legislature was called upon for another to counteract its effects, and the Planters' Bank was chartered, and the State became its partner also, subscribing or purchasing near a quarter of a million of dollars of its stock.

The expansions and contractions of these two banks were supposed to have had much influence in producing the disastrous period of 1837, and induced the Legislature to make a bank of its own for the protection of its citizens, and the Bank of Tennessee was chartered with a capital of five millions; but little over half its capital in active operation has been as yet furnished, whilst the interest of the State in other banks was increased to near nine hundred thousand dollars. The two banks were placed under the control of their stockholders, who are believed to be mostly citizens of other States, whilst the Bank of Tennessee was made subject to the control of the General Assembly.

Private capital controlled by private interests was thus strayed against public capital under the control of the Legislature; and near a million of dollars of the means of the State placed under the control of the former, to enable it the more successfully to compete with the latter.

It cannot be otherwise than the management of these antagonistic interests, collisions will take place prejudicial to the interests of the people and the State as well as the banks. In the last message of Gov. Johnson, the entire circulation of the State is stated at nine millions of dollars, it cannot now but little exceed one-third of that sum.

Debts contracted by the State, counties and cities, internal improvement companies, as well as individuals, upon the inflated currency that then existed, will now have to be paid with the present diminished circulation, if not reduced to a gold and silver one exclusively. Such expansions and contractions in the paper currency of the State, cannot but injuriously affect every interest, and will occur periodically so long as it is left under the control of the stock banks, as it has heretofore been, and whenever their interests may demand it, which are often most advanced by its irregularity.

Whatever may now be thought of the propriety and price of labor, that its proper regulation has become of the utmost importance to every interest, and cannot not be left to the control of bankers and brokers as heretofore, but should be placed under the control of the representatives of the people. The State should not only control the amount to be used and its kind, but should be responsible to its holders for every paper dollar issued by its authority, and that all the profits arising from the banking system, should be paid into the public treasury and relieve the people from the taxation to that extent.

I entertain not a doubt that the Bank of Tennessee and its branches, by proper amendments of its charter, and an increase of its capital to the amount originally contemplated in its framework, will be enabled to do the entire banking business of the State, more satisfactorily than heretofore done by all the banks, and pay annually into the public treasury more than half a million of dollars—at the same time its circulation will be made safe to its holders by the ultimate liability of the State for its redemption. And with such restrictions as experience has proven necessary for the proper control of all banks, the currency may be made convertible into gold and silver at the pleasure of the holder, and the exchanges kept equal in every part of the State—we should thus have one and but one paper currency, uniform and safe, which would dispense with brokerage of all sorts by rendering it unprofitable. The bank thus modified would be THE Bank of the State, and at all times subject to the control of the representatives of the people.

C. JOHNSON,

President of the Bank of Tennessee.
