An exchange tells of an old farmer when urged by an implement dealer to buy a new binder, refused, saying he had nothing to sell but a lot of horses and could not sell them, for threshers were now run by steam, street cars were run by electricity, and this government was run by a lot of d—n jackasses, and where does a horse come in anyway.

If you propose doing anyone a kindness, do it now. If you think to say a loving word say it now. If you expect to send those roses, send them now. If you hope to meet your friend again, your wife, your child, your mother, your father, try to meet them now. Time flies all too swiftly. The kindness you cherish in your heart may pass away, unexpressed, forgotten. The loving word you had upon your tongue may fall upon silent ears, for to-morrow he or she may be beyond recall. The rose that you have in your keeping will fade, and its perfume be lost. You never will pass this way again in life, so far as we know. Swift stalks death. We meet him in the middle of the road. Do not have it said of you that your kindness, your roses, your remembrances, or your good words came like the pardon, too late.—Ex.

The "tired feeling," the headache and the nervous strain of which so many people complain are often home-bred maladies. Our living rooms and sleeping rooms are kept too close. We are poisoned with our own exhalations. Throw open the doors and windows and let in the revivifying and purifying air of heaven! Better the drafts, the flies, the mosquitoes even, than the unventilated rooms kept sacred from the light and from the visitation of the winds which carry new life where they wander. The hunters and the trappers on duty, accustomed to live and sleep in the open air, complain of suffocation when they are obliged to sleep in houses under roofs. The open air gives them full chests and strong lungs. Until one shall go to his grave it will be well to insist upon light and airy apartments. After that, it will be small matter.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Maloney wish to tender their most heartfelt thanks to James H. Moore and family, Elder R. B. They will never forget these genuine acts of christian charity.

McNulty & Howe, the new proprietors of the Hotel de Martin, are enjoying a very large trade and are well worthy of the patronage that is given them. The hotel is new, neat and conducted in an orderly manner. In connection they have a livery and also accommodations for farmers teams. When in Yale call on them and you will be well served.

It is said that a man in Genesee county pays his preacher promptly, tips his hat and is very kind to the doctors; and always pays for his papers in advance. He never has been sick a day in his life; never had any corns or the toothache, his potatoes never rot, the weevil never eats his wheat, the frost never kills his corn or beans; his babies never cry at night and his wife never scolds.

The following recipe has been used to get rid of the carpet bug pest with good results: 1 oz. chloride of zinc, 3 oz. salt. Mix with two quarts of water in a covered vessel and let it stand over night, then pour into another vessel and let it stand over night, then pour into another vessel without sediment. Dilute it with two quarts of water and sprinkle carpet a foot from the wall. It will not injure the carpet.

In another column of this issue of the Expositor there appears a notice in reference to a note given by J. H. Teller and F. H. Gibbs. As we have a man here by the same name, F. H. Gibbs, in the hardware business and thinking some person might believe it had reference to him we asked Mr. Gibbs if he gave such a note or if it meant him. He states positively that no person holds his note for a dollar, so it must mean some other man.

The electrical storm that passed through this section early last Friday morning is said to have been the worst in years. No damage was done to property in this vicinity, although we learn of property being destroyed around Brown City. Sunday night last the rain and hail storm was severe. The barn of Wm. Grimes in Speaker township was unroofed, and Charles Grimes' house was badly damaged. Barns and hay stacks in Greenwood and Fremont townships were torn to pieces. The loss to property was very great.

On Wednesday morning, a red faced individual, with a bright eye and beaming countenance came rushing into the Expositor office and shouted "I'm uncle!" At first the office boys were at a loss to recognize who it was or understand what had happened but upon a closer investigation found this hilarious personage to be none less than Dusty McDonald and that the real cause of all his excitement was that his brother's wife had given birth to a bouncing baby girl that morning. Here's health and happiness to the little one, Lute.
