THE APPEAL.

Thrilling Adventure.

The following thrilling adventure is from an English Magazine:

"Father will have done the great chimney to-night, won't he, mother?" said little Tom, to his mother, who sat stood waiting for his father's breakfast, which he carried to him at his work every morning.

"He said he hoped that all the scaffolding would be down to-night," answered the mother, "and that'll be a fine sight; for I never liked the ending of those great chimneys; it is so risky, for father to be the last up."

"Eh, then, but I'll go and see him, and help 'em to give a shout afore he comes down," said Tom.

"And then," continued the mother, "if all goes on right, we are to have a frolic to-morrow and go into the country, and take our dinners, and spend all the day in the woods."

"Hurra!" cried Tom, as he ran off to his father's place of work, with a can of milk in one hand and some bread in the other. His mother stood at the door, watching him as he went merrily whistling down the street, and she thought of the dear father he was going to, and the dangerous work he was engaged in, and then her heart sought its sure refuge, and she prayed to God to protect and bless her treasures.

Tom, with a light heart, pursued his way to his father, and leaving him his breakfast, went to his own work, which was at some distance. In the evening, on his way home, he went around to see how his father was getting on.

James Howard, the father, and a number of other workmen, had been building one of those lofty chimneys, which in our great manufacturing towns, almost supply the place of other architectural beauty. The chimney was of the highest and most tapering that had ever been erected, and as Tom shaded his eyes from the slanting rays of the setting sun, and looked up in search of his father, his heart almost sank within him at the appalling sight. The scaffold was almost down, the men at the bottom were removing the last beam and poles. Tom's father stood alone at the top.

He then looked around to see that everything was right, and then waving his hat in the air, the men below, answering him with a long, loud cheer, little Tom shouting as loud as any of them. As their voices died away, however, they heard a different sound, a cry of alarm and horror from above. "The rope! the rope!" The men looked around, and coiled upon the ground lay the rope, which, before the scaffold was removed, should have been fastened to the chimney, for Tom's father to come down by! The scaffolding had been taken down without remembering to take the rope up. There was a dead silence. They all knew it was impossible to throw the rope up high enough, or skillful enough to reach the top of the chimney, or if it could, it would hardly be safe. They stood in silent dismay, unable to give any help or think of any means of safety.

And Tom's father. He walked round and round the little circle, the dizzy height seemed more and more fearful, and the solid earth further and further from him. In the sudden panic he lost his presence of mind, and his senses failed him. He shut his eyes; he felt as if the next moment he must be dashed to pieces on the ground below.

The day passed as industriously as usual with Tom's mother at home. She was always busily employed for her husband and children in some way or other, and to-day she had been harder at work than usual, getting ready for the holiday to-morrow. She had just finished her arrangements, and her thoughts were silently thanking God for the happy home, and for all these blessings of life, when Tom ran in.

His face was as white as ashes, and he could hardly get his words out: "Mother! mother! he cannot get down."

"Who, lad? thy father?" asked the mother.

"They have forgotten to leave him the rope," answered Tom, still scarcely able to speak. The mother started up, horror-struck, and stood for a moment as if paralized; then, pressing her hands over her face, as if to shut out the terrible picture, and, breathing a prayer to God for help, she rushed out of the house.

When she reached the place where her husband was at work, a crowd gathered around the foot of the chimney, and stood quite helpless, gazing up with pale faces full of sorrow.

"He says he'll throw himself down!"

"The mauma do that, lad, cried the wife with a clear, hopeful voice; "thee munna do that. Wait a bit. Take off thy stocking, lad, and unravel it, and let down the thread with a bit of mortar. Dost thou hear me, Jem?"

The man made a sign of assent; for it seemed as if he could not speak—and taking off his stocking, unraveled the worsted yarn row after row. The people stood around in breathless silence and suspense, wondering what Tom's mother could be thinking of; and why she sent him in such haste for the carpenter's ball of twine.

"Let down one end of the thread, with a bit of stone, and keep fast hold of the other," cried she to her husband. The little thread came wavering down the tall chimney, blown hither and thither by the wind, but it reached the outstretched hands of those waiting for it. Tom held the ball of twine, while his mother tied one end of it to the worsted thread.

"Now pull it slowly," cried she to her husband, and she gradually unwound the string until it reached her husband. "Now hold that string fast, and pull it up," cried she, and the string grew heavy and hard to pull, for Tom and his mother had fastened a thick rope to it. They watched it gradually and slowly uncoiling from the ground, as the string was drawn higher.

There was but one coil left. It had reached the top. "Thank God! thank God!" exclaimed the wife. She hid her face in her hands in silent prayer, and trembling, raised the iron to which it should be fastened was there all right—but would her husband be able to make use of it? Would not the terror of the past hour so have unnerved him as to prevent him from taking the necessary measure for his safety? She did not know the magical influence which her few words had exercised over him. She did not know the strength that the sound of her voice, so calm and steadfast, had filled him with—as if the little thread that carried him the hope of life once more, had conveyed to him some portion of that faith in God which nothing ever destroyed or shook in her purest heart. She did know that as she waited there, the words came over him: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God!" She lifted her heart to God for hope and strength, but could do nothing more for her husband, and her heart returned to God, and rested on him as on a rock.

There was a great shout. "He's, mother, he's safe!" cried little Tom.

"Thou hast saved my life, my Mary," said her husband, folding her in his arms. "But what ails thee? thou seemest more sorry than glad about it." But Mary could not speak, and if the strong arm of her husband had not held her up, she would have fallen to the ground—the sudden joy after such great fear had overcome her. "Tom, let thy mother lean on thy shoulder," said his father, "and we will take her home." And in their happy home they poured forth their thanks to God for his great goodness, and their happy life together felt dearer and holier for the great peril it had been in, and the nearness of the danger had brought them unto God. And the holiday next day—was it not a thanksgiving day?

The Amoor River—New Opening for Commerce.

Recent explorations of the river Amoor in Northeastern Asia, and the formation of a trading company for developing the great resources of that country, reminds us that, remote and inaccessible as this region may seem to the great mass of our people, it is, nevertheless, one which is not without its commercial bearings on the interests of our citizens—especially those dwelling on the Pacific coast. And in earnest of this fact we have only to refer to the series of letters addressed to our Secretaries of State, Mr. Marcy and General Cass, by the United States Commercial Agent for the Amoor river, recently published by order of the House of Representatives. These letters contain much valuable information respecting the resources of a country hitherto but little known. We need not say that prior to the settlement of California we were accustomed to look upon the great regions of Siberia, Manchooria and Mongolia, as placed almost entirely beyond the reach or limits of our commercial intercourse, but now that our ports on the Pacific are within thirty days' sail of the port of Asia, and now that Russia has determined to open to trade the vast tracts drained by the sources of the Amoor, there are not wanting those who predict that the development of this Siberian trade is destined to produce in the end as great a revolution in the commercial world as sprang from the discovery of a passage to India via the Cape of Good Hope.

Without founding upon these recent explorations and movements in Siberia and Manchooria such magnificent anticipations as seem to be cherished by more sanguine, we are ready to admit that the present importance and future promise of this Asiatic commerce are quite sufficient to attract the attention of intelligent traders, and to claim at the hands of our legislators that careful consideration which is inspired by a vigilant regard to the commercial interests of the country in a quarter not hitherto suspected, but whose relations to our Pacific trade are capable, we think, of easy demonstration, unless the resources of Northern Asia have been greatly magified.

The government of Russia, alive to the importance of the Amoor valley, has recently authorized the formation of a trading company, under the name of the "Society of Amoor," whose object is to develop the industrial and commercial abilities of that great basin. The principal of the company is to be at Irkoutsk, but it is authorized to send along the course of the Amoor, and at its mouth, such commodious houses, magazines and ship-yards as may be found necessary for its operations. Having received the special attention of the Czar, by a ukase under date of January 11, 1856, it is avowedly established, not only of developing the country, but also with the view of nourishing a profitable foreign trade. To this end, the Emperor had already, during the last year, commended that the American (English) language should be taught in all the schools of the Siberian provinces, in order that the inhabitants might be better enabled to carry on commercial intercourse with our countrymen in California and Oregon.

A writer in the National Intelligencer estimates the value of the trade now carried on between China and Siberia at the sum of twenty-one millions of dollars! This commerce, which has its headquarters at Moinatchin, in Northern China, and at Kyachta, in Southern Siberia, employs as the means of transportation, 36,000 camels and oxen, and more than 100,000 horses. It is now proposed that this trade, or so much of it as may be profitable, shall find its way into Siberia by the Amoor, and thus save millions of dollars in the expense of transportation, and, at the same time, open a wider market for such productions as will not bear the cost of land carriage for so great a distance. To give some adequate idea of the magnificent designs entertained by the Russian government with reference to this hyperborean region, we may add that a railroad of three hundred miles is projected to connect the navigable waters of the Amoor with the navigable waters of the Lena, the great river of the North, and another from Chetah to Kyachta, for the purpose of connecting the head-waters of the Amoor with the system of railroads extending to Moscow and St. Petersburg. Two corps of engineers, it is stated, are now engaged in making the necessary surveys for these roads, while another, of four hundred miles in length, between Pekin and the navigable waters of the Slongahra, a tributary of the Amoor, is said to be in contemplation. When we consider the immense extent of the territory under the Russian dominion, and mark the rapid progress which has already been made in its redemption from barbarism, who does not perceive that it presents a field to which the greatest ideas are capable of realization only the more speedily because the sovereign power is in the hands of one man having the head to conceive vast designs and the will to carry them into effect?—New York Shipping List.

CARSON'S PUMP SHOP,

On Second Alley,

BETWEEN FRONT AND MONROE,

THE undersigned would respectfully inform the citizens of Memphis and its vicinity, and his numerous customers living at a distance in the country for their past patronage in his line of business, which business has hitherto been confined to the manufacturing and putting in the Chain-Pump alone, and still believing them to be the best pump in use, when made of good materials and nicely put up, (and the manner when not so made and put up,) however, as there are places where the Chain Pump cannot be used; also few persons retaining so old a fashioned pump who think that there are other Pumps in use superior to the Chain Pump. I have determined to accommodate the taste of all by putting up the Chain Pump, or any other, if a Pump that this house has on hand. I have therefore, employed an experienced workman, lately from the East, who will assist in putting up and repairing all kinds of Iron Pumps. He will also do every kind of PLUMBING, all of which I will warrant and when I say I can warrant, I mean what I say, and say what I mean.

I have in the last year alone of machinery to a number of my customers, in the country, some. I have also used large balance wheels on Hand Chain Pumps with good success. In one case I have used the welded Link Chain and Turned Bottom, which is quite expensive "but it "hadn't tut away."

"MULTUM IN PARVO."

I have recently invented a CHAIN PUMP BOX, embracing the complete, separate and distinct Chain-Pump, (or the Chain Pump in its entirety, (and description) two pounds of cast water from this box at the same time, blending in merriment with each other whatever, being the best, with the partition, wall or room, large enough for an outfit, for or cat, chicken or mouse to crawl from one yard to the other. I would refer you to any of the Pump, to F. G. Sanford and J. R. Morrison & Co.

W. CARSON,

P. S. I am prepare to ship Pumps on orders in short notice, up or down, east or west of the Mississippi river.

Call and examine the land as I am determined to sell. I can be found at my residence three miles north of LaGrange, and will take pleasure in showing it to any one wishing to purchase.
