THE APPEAL.

EIGHT LONG YEARS AGO

TO MY MOTHER.

From the Sunny South.]

My mother, well do I remember,
How more than eight long years ago;
'Twas in the month before September,
When first I bade thee sad adieu.

'Twas when my heart was young and tender,
How more than eight long years ago,
I left thee far away to wander,
Where I had neither friend nor foe.

How sad to find myself a stranger,
How more than eight long years ago,
Pressed to country, wife and danger,
With which large cities overflow.

To thee my heart was turning ever,
How more than eight long years ago,
Memory sadness weight my chamber,
And pressed upon my pensive brow.

But though away from father mother,
How more than eight long years ago,
I met with one distinguished stranger,
Who proved a friend in weal or woe.

Thou want not then in weeds of mourning,
How more than eight long years ago,
And health upon thy cheek was glowing,
Whilst care then didst but little know.

But what a change has come upon thee,
Since more than eight long years ago!
Thy husband hath been taken from thee,
And left the sorrowing here below.

But think not, mother, that's forsaken,
Because thy husband's race is run;
Then hast a friend who'll never forsake thee—
That friend is proud to be—

THY SON.

"American Statesmanship."

From the Nashville Union.]

We are indebted to our Kentucky correspondent for an interesting review of Prentice's lectures. We have heretofore published a communication on this subject in which the performance was examined in a purely literary point of view. The letter which we now publish presents it in a political aspect. We coincide with our correspondent in the opinion that Mr. Prentice's judgment of American Statesmen is too harsh and indiscriminate. We believe that no member of Congress from the South has ever been accused of corruption, and if every officer of Government from the slave-holding States has not been above a reproach or suspicion of dishonesty, the exception may be found in Mr. Prentice's own party.

PRENTICE'S LECTURE IN CLARKSVILLE.

GARRETTSBURG, Ky., November 29.

G. G. POINDEXTER, Esq.: On the night of the 26th inst. the celebrated George D. Prentice delivered, in the city of Clarksville, a lecture on "American Statesmanship." Happening to be in town, with a large amount of curiosity and fifty cents in cash, I went to hear him; and as some of your readers may not enjoy that pleasure, and as the subject of the above mentioned necessary articles, I propose to treat that unfortunate class to my experience, free of charge.

That the lecture was a fine specimen of literary composition no one will deny, its periods were beautifully rounded and keenly pointed, every word was admirably selected and in its proper place; but with this is said the good is all said. The tone and temper were, to my mind, in wretched taste. Nothing could have been more ill-natured, vindictive and spiteful. If his pen had been dipped in gall it could not have been more bitter. If a stranger to our country had heard Mr. Prentice and believed him, he must have concluded that all the officers of our Government were scoundrels, and the halls of Congress a den of thieves, indeed he said "totidem verbis" that our representatives went to Washington to steal. That there are corrupt men in Congress we all know, but how the gentleman could form so poor an opinion of the whole body is inexplicable to me, unless when he advertised to deliver a lecture on "American Statesmanship," he used the word American in its modern or party sense. In that case I will not dispute with him. His political associations are all with that party and I suppose he knows them.

But all this wholesale slander and abuse of our public men might pass for the grumbling of a soured, discontented, disappointed politician, bid there not lurk beneath it an ulterior and prime object. The lecturer knowing his great reputation as a writer and knowing that the simple announcement of his name will draw a crowded house, composed in part of those opposed to him in politics, whilst professing to lay aside the partisan, is, in reality, canvassing the country to promote insidiously the interest of his own party. This fact must be evident to every attentive listener, for when he paints in such hideous colors the corruption of our rulers, he alludes, of course, to those in power, or in other words the Democratic party, and if he can persuade the people to rise in their majesty and hurl this party from power, his party may perchance get in. Now, if this distinguished gentleman chose to canvass the State of Tennessee as other men, nobody would object. But when he comes amongst us merely as a lecturer, and in that capacity attracts persons to hear him who would otherwise stay away, and in exchange for their money gives them an American speech, it is unfair to say the least of it.

As a literary man, I greatly admire Mr. Prentice, but as a politician, he has certainly done more to corrupt public sentiment at the South than all others combined. His brilliant genius and flashing wit have "dazzled but to lead on astray."

Important to Planters!
New and Improved
COTTON TIE
— OR —
HOOP LOCK.
P. C. INGERSOLL'S Patent.
THIS most useful invention can now be seen at the Hardware Store of Mr. Wm. Smith, No. 11 Front Row, Memphis, Tenn; its wonderfully simple adaptation to the purpose required is apparent at a glance; the security attached thereto is also apparent; the facility of using it more compact than any other TIE now in use.
Read the following from the Montgomery (Ala.) Mail:
INGERSOLL'S Hoop Lock.—We have seen a bale of cotton tied with hoop iron fastened with this new device. It seems to accomplish the end proposed with the essentials of cheapness and simplicity. The "lock" consists of two small castings, about 1½ inches long and one inch thick, perforated together in the centre. The under one has an upward tube each end sufficiently wide to admit each end of the hoop. The upper one, or bolt, has a recess at each end, and a depression in its upper surface, for about half an inch from the end.
The manner of applying is very simple. Any common hoop iron of proper width and thickness (which is about ¼ inch and scant 1-16 inch thick,) and of any required length to suit the bale, is taken in the hand, one end inserted in the opening from the upper side, and the end of the under part of the lock to the length of about one inch, and then bent over the end of the lock. The other end of the hoop is then passed around the bale and drawn through a loop or opening in the opposite end of the lock, and then bent over the end of the lock. The bottom is then turned back to the distance of two inches from the hoop is fast on the bale, and the bale may be moved to the proper place, and then bending down the end, the ends of the hoops are clipped with tinners' shears to the proper length, and then bent up over each end into the recess or depression referred to in the end of the lock, thus being done either before or after the bale leaves the press.
The advantages seem to be that any quality of iron can be used; that no particular length of iron is required, so it is long enough to go round the bale; and that no skill is required to prepare them or put them on. These are said to be advantages over every other device known.
The advantages of metal ties will hardly be denied at this late day, the question having been frequently discussed. The safety to life and property in transporting the great staple by land and water, when so tied, will not be disputed. Its cheapness is also in its favor with the perfection and security of the package is also apparent.
The NEW COTTON TIE.—We understand that the gentlemen who have taken the stock, of the strength of hoop iron as a band for cotton, was recently mentioned.
A bale weighing 521 pounds, was thrown off the top of a wagon in this yesterday at the stock, of the strength of hoop iron as a band for cotton, was recently mentioned.
