Death of William P. Barry.

Communicated.]

When the statesman or military chieftain falls, the pen of the eulogist is ever prompt and adequate to the task of recording the outpouring of bereaved friendships or wounded devotion, but when the private citizen, whose ambition has actuated him to high, noble and generous deeds in the private walks of life, is stricken down, the steady light of the star is forgotten, obscured by the brilliancy of some glaring comet. I am brought to these reflections by the announcement of the death of William P. Barry of this city, which took place yesterday in Nashville. Mr. Barry was known to many of us as a citizen, a valuable Alderman, for one year, and a high hearted, noble gentleman. No man ever looked behind the apparently cold exterior, which the conventionalities of society caused him to wear, without finding a heart all sunshine and full of the kindest sentiments to all God's universe. He cherished no enmity—for there was no bitterness in his soul—he loved his friends, not that he might make them instrumental in the gratification of selfish ends, but, that he might render them happy. In all the relations of life he was the true gentleman, his heart always melted in the sunlight of kindness, and softened in the presence of poverty, suffering and sorrow, but his principles were as solid as a rock.

He is gone! but I know that all who knew him will pardon the tear which starts unbidden from the eyes of his friends. A. H. D

THE MEXICAN QUESTION—SHALL WE RESTORE ORDER IN MEXICO?—The correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune, writing from the City of Mexico, under date of November 18, suggests that, as the United States cannot annex and admit into the Union at present the seven or eight millions of the colored races of Mexico, and, as something must be done to restore peace and order to the country and prevent foreign intervention from Europe, that we send there an American force, and afterwards take the natives into our service, like the Sepoys of British India, collect their revenues, set the people to work, and by proper management they may hereafter become fit for annexation at some future time, and useful ben to themselves, and to us along but left to themselves without a new training, they will be a nuisance and an evil to us in time to come, provided other nations are willing to let them alone, which cannot be expected, because their subjects here are constantly applying to them for protection. Such a policy is well worthy of consideration. It would be the establishment of law and order under an American guaranty and protectorate—a sort of half-way house to the annexation of the whole country, which must ultimately all be ours.

TRADE WITH THE FAR WEST.—We extract the following from an editorial which appeared recently in the Fort Smith Times and invite the attention of our merchants to the suggestions which it contains:

"It is frequently asked why do not the people of the Southern cities do something to gain friends in this section of the country, and have correspondents and agents to inform them of the advantages of extending their trade and influence throughout this country, and, we, in answer, must say that we have arrived at the following conclusions.

"The cause of this is, neither New Orleans, Memphis or any other city in the South is reaching out for strength in this direction—New Orleans being led off by the Texas railroad interests, and Memphis is afraid to say anything in our favor for fear the will injure the Cairo and Fulton Railroad, while St. Louis comes out boldly in favor of the 35th parallel, and extends every advantage to the people of this country to patronize that city for goods, and especially to draw the bulk of the travel through there and the influence of St. Louis is beginning to be felt more and more every day.

"At an very distant day a trade will be opened between this city and New Mexico which will be of very material advantage to Memphis or New Orleans, but judging from their past course, we presume they will lay dormant and permit St. Louis to monopolize the whole trade with this city, country and New Mexico which she intends doing if she is not prevented by Southern cities.

"It appears the South is not aware of the importance of the influence, provided a railroad should be built from St. Louis to Texas, or California, and none from Memphis to an intersect it here, the north would have ever it and are making no effort to secure the influence of the country, in bringing it properly before the people of the United States, but waiting for further developments, while the North is wide awake to its interests and endeavoring to bring the trade of Western and Northern Arkansas and that of Northern Texas, and New Mexico and all the Territories lying west of Arkansas, to its own doors. If the people of Memphis are in favor of extending her trade to this section of country, why do not the newspapers of that city speak out—why are the merchants and capitalists sleeping? They need not fear that if the Pacific Railroad is built on the 35th parallel, that St. Louis would have any advantage, for the people of the South, on arriving here, would continue on the 35th parallel to Memphis, Tennessee, or Charleston, South Carolina, and the people of the North to St. Louis.

The Postmaster-General's Report.

From the Washington Union.]

This paper, which we give entire this morning, is one of the most important that has ever before issued from the Post Office Department. For the first time in the history of the Government there has been established, within the last year, a system of mails reaching across the continent, and connecting the most distant and isolated districts of our wide-spread territory into contact with our mail system. The extention of the system during the last season has been over a territory almost as vast as the country which it had before been spread; and we have no doubt that ours is at present the most colossal postal system in the world.

There is no doubt that the establishment of mail-coach routes across the continent, through regions in which the white man is yet a stranger, and which are still held by the wild Indians of the West, will prove a potential means of suppressing the hostilities of the savage, which now are so annoying to our people. We see a far-distant race establishing through their country, at intervals of fifteen or twenty miles, posts and relays of horses and coaches, and it are companies of eight or ten white men boldly traversing their country in perfect fearlessness, is a quiet exhibition of force and power, indicating a mighty potentiality residing behind, which, we are told, strikes terror wile men with astonishment and awe. This with the striking impression which our Utah army made upon the savage mind in marching over the plains last spring, must result are long in establishing pacific relations with nearly all the Indian tribes of the trans-Mississippi region.

Of course, the immense postal system, which has lately been converted, from a mere commercial agency delivering packages among cities, villages, and populations for hire, into a great political agency of civilization, emigration, and progress, which has penetrated not only our populous districts in the East, but our vast territorial dominion in the West—et cetera, we say, this system which has thus so prodigiously enlarged in its aim and design, is no longer a self-sustaining organization. Everything has been done by the Postmaster-General to reduce the cost of the system to the lowest standard, and we have no doubt that the country will sustain him, in his indefatigable efforts to bring the system to its present usefulness and magnitude.

But the Postmaster-General does not rest his case here. He points out the modes by which the system can readily be made self-sustaining and financially remunerative. Three reforms will render the most colossal postal system in the world self-sustaining. These reforms are, first, the raising of the rate of letter postage to five cents for all distances; second the abolition of the franking privilege of Congress, grown into an enormous abuse; and, third, the discontinuance of the practice of requiring routes to be run as a condition of letting mails over the routes on which the mail is now carried in coaches. The first measure would impose an additional tax which scarcely a thousand men in the entire Union would feel, and would, moreover, conform the rate of postage to the decimal currency of the country. The second would relieve the mails of three-fourths of their present burden and bulk of matter. The third would relieve the government of the extra expense of supporting a vast system of coach lines for travelers, where it could procure the transport of mail matter on horse-back or in sulkies at one-fourth the present outlay. We trust these admirable recommendations of the Postmaster-General will meet the prompt approval of Congress.

A PLEASING INCIDENT.—We accidentally became acquainted on Saturday, with a little circumstance which speaks well for humanity. Two little girls were, by the death of their mother, left almost friendless in the city of Cincinnati a few days since. The Lodge of Sons of Malta in that city became cognizant of the fact, and immediately took charge of the orphans. They were fed clothed and cared for at once. A member, rich in this world's goods as well as in kindly feelings, adopted the oldest sister, and took her to his house. The younger was adopted by a brother of the Order resident in New Haven, Connecticut. She was fitted out by the Order with clothes, money, and a through ticket, and on Saturday she was accompanied to this point by a Cincinnati brother.

Here she was given in charge of a member who was traveling East, and who undertook to see her safely to her new home. The child is bright and intelligent, warmly clad, and well cared for by her new friends.

We have no doubt other such incidents of kindness on the part of this eccentric order could be given, but the secrecy with which their deeds of charity are carried out prevents them from coming before the public. It was the merest chance that revealed this incident to us. We have the name of the Cincinnati brother, but withhold it in respect to his wishes.—Cleveland Herald

WINTER EVENINGS.—Winter evenings should be occupied in reading, by those who have no business to employ them. Nine tenths of mankind spend more than seven tenths of their (neither in business, recreation, or needful repose) than is necessary, if employed in judicious reading, to make them very intelligent members of society. But how many are there who do not even read a newspaper! They have not time, or they cannot afford the expense—yet they can idle two or three hours in a day, and spend the price of half a dozen newspapers, or a share in a public library.

Judge Douglas and the Chairmanship of the Committee on Territories.

Yesterday it was resolved, in a caucus of Democratic Senators, that Judge Douglas should be displaced from his position as chairman of the Committee on Territories. Various if not incompatible arguments are urged in justification of the movement.

In the first place, it is contended that inasmuch as Judge Douglas proposes to prolong his absence from Washington, the public interests require the appointment of a substitute on the committee. If this allegation were the operative reason of his removal, although unfounded in point of fact, there would be some apology for the act. But the truth is, that in the absence of the chairman of a committee, invariable usage promotes the next member to the vacancy, and so the progress of business is not at all interrupted. As the successor of Judge Douglas under this rule would have been a person of unexceptionable principles, the loss of the titular chairman would have been supplied in a manner the most agreeable to Southern Senators. We are not permitted, then, to attribute the deposition of Judge Douglas to a motive which is simply imaginary; nor can it be excused upon a plea which is hardly equivalent to a decent pretext. We may admit the inconvenience of his absence from the committee; but, inasmuch as a most worthy chairman would have succeeded in the order of precedence, the formal displacement of Judge Douglas is obviously without justification in the necessities of the public business.

With more candor, if not with greater reason, other Senators argue, that the heresy of Judge Douglas' doctrine of territorial sovereignty unfits him for the post which he occupied. If this statement be true, it avails not merely to degrade him from the chief position, but from any place whatever on the committee. For, as a simple member, he is possessed of as much capacity for mischief as if he were chairman. But, he is retained upon the committee, with the same vote and with no diminution of influence. What is the inference? Every intelligent person will conclude either that Senators are insincere in the argument by which they attempt to justify the removal of Judge Douglas, or that their conduct is singularly absurd and inconsequential. The public will probably settle upon the conviction that the act originated in an impulse of personal animosity, and that these various excuses are invented for the purpose of palliating a foregone conclusion.

If Judge Douglas had been displaced from the chairmanship of the Committee on Territories during the last session of Congress, we might have understood the meaning of the movement. He avowed his heterodox dogma and declared against the policy of the Administration, before the organization of the committees in the Senate. He was then in flagrant delinquency as a Democrat, and the principle, in respect of which he exhibited his eccentricity, was an actual, urgent issue before the country. Nevertheless his Democratic associates agreed to retain him in his position. Now, the case is essentially different. The Kansas controversy has been since adjusted, and no contingency can the question of squatter sovereignty be revived during the present session. Judge Douglas has resumed his relations in the party, and in atonement of his error pleads the merit a most signal triumph over Black Republicanism. Is this the moment for the execution of the suspended sentence of excommunication? In the absence of any fresh provocation, and of any necessity in the interest either of party or the public service, the country will be disposed to impute the blow to some other motive than a concern for the integrity of principle.

Perhaps some might suspect that Judge Douglas is deposed because his position will, in view of discredditing a mischevious dogma, if ever since did not teach the impolicy of combating error by persecution. It is the highest of folly to identify a bad cause with the interests of justice and magnanimity. In the moment of resentment against an ingenuous act, the people will not pause to consider of the prosecution. If this movement against Judge Douglas were the artful contrivance of a Disunion Senator, it could not be better adapted to the purpose of re-establishing him in the affections of the Democracy. As we profess no special attachment to his fortunes, we cannot rejoice even in an act which will contribute so effectively to the advancement of his interests as an aspirant for the Presidency.

But we object to the movement still more because of its disastrous effect upon the Democratic party. It revives an extinct issue. It fishes resentments which were just beginning to disappear, and under the influence of more charitable and considerate counsels. It imposes an obstacle to the repair of the breach which wise men deplore in the interests of the country. It encourages Black Republicanism with an assurance of triumph over a disorganized Democracy. Upon the condition of an exact an entire uniformity of opinion among individuals, the unity of the party is an impossible consummation. If Mr. Douglas is to be ostracized for his non-conformity in respect of one article of Democratic faith, some bigots may demand that Mr. Buchanan be expelled because of his protective tariff heresy. When once the policy of intolerance is inaugurated, we may as well despair of perpetuating the ascendency of the party.

We invoke conciliation among Democrats. We deprecate the imposition of retaliatory tests, no matter upon what pretext of regard for principle. We protest against the wanton agitation of detracting issues. If, however, it is obligatory upon Senators to make the doctrine of the Democratic party on the rights of slavery in the Territories, we entreat them to select an occasion when the authority of the exposition will not be impaired by the suspicion of personal interest or ungenerous motive. Washington States.

THE STRATFORD GALLERY:

Or, the Shakspeare Sketchbook, comprising in its five steel portraits, the original by Mrs. J. C. Smith, the Imperial miniature.

The gem of this beautiful work is as original as it is attractive. In its respect it is a more reproduction of the "Shakspeare Gallery," and "Heroines of Shakspeare;" so well known to the trade; but with much novelty and taste combines the story-telling quality of Charles Lamb, with the graceful criticism of Mrs. Jameson. The editor has judiciously lent her title to view, and from page to page, as from picture the conduct the reader—author through her gallery, delighted by descriptive with story and quotation. The work is a counterpart, and sitting companion to the "World-Noted Women," Mrs. Mary Cowden Clarke, and the "Republican Court" of Mr. Griswold.

THE DRESDEN GALLERY.
