THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE IN EUROPE.

OPINIONS OF THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH PRESS

From the Courrier de Paris, December 24.]

The latest news from the United States, announcing that the government of Washington had taken the serious consideration the energetic representations of France and England, and had decided to put a stop to the expedition of Walker, gives us calm and tranquillity, especially as to the fate of Nicaragua. That bold adventurer, (Walker) has shown that, in case of need, he is able to deceive the complacent watch (surveillance) but the American police, and we should not be surprised to learn by subsequent dispatches that he has succeeded in leaving Mobile. Mr. Buchanan's administration will not be embarrassed in proving that it has on this occasion used all the means allowed it by the Constitution to prevent the guilty enterprise, and it would then deliver its responsibility towards the two great European powers.

But even admitting that the government of the Union sincerely wishes to keep its engagements, and that it succeeds in preventing the sailing of the filibusters, the fears conceived about Nicaragua and the other small States of Central America will remain the same. One cannot deny that the schemes of Walker inspire lively and almost an unanimous sympathy beyond the Atlantic, where they do not care much about what civilization may call international laws. The Federal Government itself, by its neglect to punish the filibusters, or rather by its evident connivance with them, has really shown how it looks upon them. If now it resolves to oppose them, it is, we believe, because of the firm attitude of the Paris and London cabinets—it does not consider it prudent to do otherwise. But we would be wrong to expect from the former President of the Second Congress greater zeal than he has hitherto shown on this question.

Besides, there, more than on any other point of the American continent, the policy of annexation is a necessity for the United States. The discovery of gold in California renders a debouche for them on the Pacific coast indispensable. It is no longer sufficient for them to obtain, as after their war with Mexico, the lands in the West, simply by improving them. They ought, at every sacrifice, and will little delay, to establish sure and easy communications between the new State and the rest of the Union. Thus, they should now relinquish the pick-axe of the pioneer and the hatchet of the woodman—their ordinary instruments of conquest—to take in their stead the dangerous, perhaps, but expeditious mode of a coup de main.

Europe, meanwhile, cannot tolerate the semblance of such an enterprise. The same considerations which led them to undertake the war against Russia, they have with equal force, and they are sustained by motives of general interest which there would be danger in forgetting. By her situation Central America is destined to become the principal emporium of the commerce of the world, and to let the United States take possession of it would be to yield to them the monopoly of the future transactions between Europe and the Interior Orient.

On the other hand, ought France and England to determine upon keeping themselves in these latitudes forces sufficient to oppose every act of piracy? That step would create incessant causes of conflict, and thus render the maintenance of peace almost impossible. Yet it is necessary to do, then, is to strengthen the little States, to show them how to protect themselves by themselves. It has been so far more days past there is a project for a mixed monarchy for the Island of Cuba, and there for Porto Rico, which would give to those possessions an independent existence, a form of which they have always been deprived. It is possible, also, that in the near future Mexico—alas! for her internal complications—Mexico, we repeat, calm, she can then follow their example, and as intimate alliance between the three kingdoms would suffice to protect them against the aggressive ambitions of their powerful neighbors. This plan is said to be irresistible, and Spain, the first who has taken the initiative, would not hesitate a moment to put it into practice. Perhaps for herself it is not to be regretted, for she does not at present succeed in maintaining her dominion over Cuba by example, but has to old it by a display of force which renders that precious colony a burdensome charge upon the mother country.

There has been a question, likewise, but with more hesitation, it appears, as to a confederation between the three States of Central America; and it is also added that the Presidents of these three republics intend to assemble in Congress at Guatemala, at the end of this month, for the purpose of laying the base of that union. France hardly recognizes that combination, and will even issue a delegate to assist at the conference.

We make these observations, since no obstacle appears to hinder a more extensive manifestation. These States ought to cast aside all rivalry, and remember that their isolation only makes them feeble, and leaves them defenseless against the attempts of invasion by the United States. It is only by contrasting among themselves a confederation upon liberal and sincere basis, that they will preserve their independence and arrive at the degree of prosperity which the near future promises them.

"Under the influence of a grand international movement, which plans for itself each day, an important role is reserved in reality to Central America. The center of the world, from the point of geographical view, it is there that it ought to be one day the center of the commerce of the Orient and Occident. The space which she occupies, comprised of the Pacific Ocean, ports which she controls, is relatively exceedingly small, being only 150,000 miles square, or 479,000 kilometres. Her population does not exceed altogether two millions of inhabitants, who are divided between the States as follows: Guatemala 265,000; San Salvador, 394,000; Honduras, 350,000; Nicaragua, 300,000; Costa Rica, 125,000.

That is only an average of thirteen inhabitants for four square kilometres, and it is remembered that France, far from being peopled, the country least populous in Europe, contains in it sixty-eight, one will be struck with the smallness of that proportion. But the vicious and enervating system of Spanish colonization, and the anarchy which has reigned there for a long time since their emancipation, has contributed to keep those beautiful regions in the condition of solitude in which they were found. Nevertheless, a calm political situation, and the construction of the projected canal through Nicaragua, of which M. Belly has obtained the concession, will create a commercial activity which will rapidly draw there the current of Europeans and Asiatics, which hitherto has been borne toward the United States, and there is no doubt that the population ought rapidly to acquire an increase, so that in several years it would be found to be doubled or trebled.

This prediction of Europe for the United States has only been too largely justified heretofore. Their life is active, fruitful, powerful; it astonishes by its incomparable prosperity; it attracts, consequently, the floods of emigrants who go to seek with their hands (the 13 hours' work, reward and property which they miss in their native land. In the old Spanish colonies of America life does not seem to have activity, but, on the contrary, to be destroyed. It is evident that the attention of the Old World should bear itself in preference towards the laboring and rich portion, contact with whom regenerates and strengthens.

But commerce and industry will react promptly to Central America, so admirably situated to serve for a transit and entrepot for the transactions of the universe—the rival and competitor of the America of the North. It is through them that she will begin to recover from the lethargy in which she remains enslaved; they surely contain the germ of strength, of richness, of grandeur, of civilization, in short, of life; of that life in which, in their impatient folly, the inhabitants have too frequently demanded, in the anarchy which brings only ruin and prepares only regrets.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO—ENGLAND.

From the London Chronicle, Dec. 27.]

The Mexicans have altered an old proverb. Their motto is "Each man for himself," but the "God for us all" is the country around the seat of Vera Cruz the so-called constitutional chieftain Juarez is in power. Like the rest, he is much in want of money, and it is reported in New York, apparently on good authority, that he is about to negotiate with some leading American capitalists a loan of five millions of dollars, for which he offers as security the lands of the Territory of Sonora. To this wretched man, who would barter his country for gold, the sympathies of the American people appear to incline.

Wherever the carrion is, there will the eagles be gathered. The armaments of three European nations are in the waters of Mexico. Will Spain, the mother-land, where allegiance she cast off when she first made a miserable attempt at governing herself, Mexico has a quarrel of some standing with Spain; recently, the French flag has been insulted, and Spain subjects murdered of forced loans to defray the expenses of a savage intercecine war. Tired for the moment of cutting one another's throats, the guerilla leaders have reciprocally turned upon the subjects of foreign powers, and of England among the rest. We have yet forgotten, we cannot forget—the flagrant outrage at Tampico, where the majority of consular protection was violated by the act of Juarez, the British flag trampled on, an unoffending British subject hurled off to a noisome dungeon, and confined till he had paid a sum of money that had been lawfully levied upon the representatives of foreign merchants. It is to avenge this outrage, and to seek redress for other similar wrongs—not to intervene in the affairs of the Mexican republic, or to insult a people who are their most ancient enemies—that the British and French allied squadron has sought the gulf of Mexico. We may also safely predicate of the Spanish government, which has for some time past been backward in demanding redress, that it seeks for nothing more, and has no intention of occupying one rood of Mexican ground.

In this gathering of angry powers, the fleet of the United States of America has not a place. But the people of that country are regarding the pending question with a feeling of anything rather than indifference. Republics are much prone to suppose a monopoly of virtue in and the base of the people is frequently more warlike than its rulers. There has for some time been a strong and increasing tendency in the American mind towards foreign aggression, and extension, by military means, of the already enormous territories of the great republic. Hitherto, if we look back to events that have just been received from New York, this feeling, in that capital at least, is now tending most strongly in the direction of Mexico. The President, it is said, is to be urgently pressed to declare himself, in his forthcoming message, in favor of the acquisition, by force of arms, if need be, of the remainder of this unhappy State. We trust, however, that he will do no such thing. We trust that those who at present recommend this course, will quickly come to a sense of the foolishness of their counsels, and of the injury which its cash adoption would be sure to inflict upon their country.

There are other things which we are ready to admit of once. Without any wish to encroach or to realize the "Monroe doctrine," we admit that if any foreign nation is to occupy the policy of France. Warned by the examples of her aggrandizement, folly, wrong and insolence, which our own country has found now present, our government and people will not again come and to stand idly looking on, while the only productive island now left of the once magnificent chain of islands that was known as the West Indies, is thus about to be dealt with, the desolate islands upon which European policy and selfishness have inflicted so terrible a blight.

The Africanization of Cuba, now the subject of fierce and great Britain, will be resisted by the United States—if not by the whole, at least by that portion of the Republic whose love of liberty, which the extension of such a scheme of barbarism, unto the better end.—N. O. Delta.
