CALEB CUSHING ON WEBSTER.

At the Webster Dinner in Boston, Caleb Cushing, who presided, made a few introductory remarks, in his highest style. We have room only for the following which all lovers of rhetoric will read with interest:

In the first place, permit me to say that my own respect, admiration and attachment for Webster, beginning at an early date, and acquiring new strength with every day of a constant and most confidential intimacy through life, settled down into that condition of mind regarding him which rightly belongs to the contemplation of one of Plutarch's men. How it would startle and move us, if Demosthenes were to step out from behind the curtained shadows of history to rouse the force Democracy of another Greece against the ambition of another Philip; or a Cicero, in his ample robe and purple-bordered tunic, hurling his consular anathemas at Cataline, or pouring forth his sensational invectives on the head of Mark Antony. Yet have we not all been moved seen this? Aye, but we may have heard it as though hearing it not, and seen it as though seeing it not. Just as the infinite and eternal God is with us always, though invisible but in his works, so God's vicegerents on earth, to whom he has vouchsafed the gift of genius, of wisdom, and of eloquence, and whom he has thus delegated and ordained to be the world's leaders, are with us; and then we see—then we elbow in the streets—then we hear of carousing in the Senate Chamber and Chamber, or the field—then we come at length to know, as one of them leaves the earth to its fate, and ascends to his congenial heaven, that we then saw, perhaps too late, by the long train of light which illumines his upward path, that a demi-god and not a man had been with us the while, working out with strong and inscrutable providences of the Almighty.

It may be, it often is, that the scales of inadvertence fall from our eyes, long before the hero-man is transfigured by death; it may be, and often is, that not before then does he rise up from the dust into which he has been overwhelmed and borne down by the brute weight and sinful mass of our passions and prejudices. Sometimes he is a Washington, and the world bows down at once in confidential reverence before its foremost in virtue and glory. Sometimes he is a Prometheus, chained to Caucasian cliffs in resentment of the good he has done, or a Socrates Apostles in the work-house of the Philistines. And so in this confused hurly-burly of life, the world's ears filled with dissonant cries of the multitinuous voices of the sea, some of them good, yet with time fortune or estimation, according as the lights or the shadows of time fall upon their pathway and their persons. Yet that Webster was one of those presidential men of history, none who saw him, either in his public or private manifestations, none who knew him, could doubt. I certainly never did; and it was a source of never-failing interest to me to witness, in life, the working of that great spirit, gigantic in force and sublime in virtue, despite all its infirmities, as it gave its counterpoise him in death, with his traits softened by time and distance, and yet brightened into distinctness by the reflected rays of a beam of light from the celestial splendors of the throne of God.

Finally, having ventured to say this much only of the general duties of a good citizen, as taught by and exemplified in Webster himself, let me add that it is my design this evening—it is that of all of us—to forget the living world of the present, its hopes and fears, its cares and joys, and to dwell for the time in the enchanted gardens and charmed halls, and amid the bright memories, the shadowy shapes, and the seraphic faces of the past. Which delights us most? which touches us most? hope or memory? I know not; but this I know, that, without them, life itself would be nothing, or next to nothing—for it is the memory of past joys which divides the one from the other, and without them, that is all there would be left of life. Sacred be the hour before then to memory! But we will not, we dare not, take the tablets of memory like Dante in the Divina Comedia to guide our footsteps along the dark vaults of the Inferno, or through the burial halls of the Purgatory, nor even to the emerald alleys and the sapphire streams of the Paradise, so as thus to make occasion to pass in review the men of our times, and to praise or to censure, to approve or condemn, according to the bias of our own political passions and prejudices. No; we will none of that to-night. Here, in this festive scene, we know naught of party, and we care as little for it as for the winds which blow without, along the sea-bound shores of Massachusetts. We come together on a platform lifted up in that serene atmosphere of friendship and faith, where it suffices us to feel that, cherishing and honoring the name of Webster, we cherish and honor the Constitution he defended, the liberty he maintained, and the Union he cphed as one and inseparable, now and forever. We do but tread the path of his own great foot-prints, indelibly streamed on the face of the rock of ages, like those of the pre-diluvite colossus birds on the banks of Connecticut, as long as we follow the flag and keep step to the music of the Union.

RAILROAD MATRIMONIAL SALUTE.—Who shall presume to say there is nothing new under the sun? An incident took place in Bellevile, Ohio, which is without a precedent. The Columbus (Ohio) Statesman says a railroad man got married at Bellevile the other day, and as he returned on the cars from Columbus, his fellow railroaders determined, upon giving him and his fair bride a salute. Fifteen or twenty locomotives were brought up standing on a switch, at the station, and as the train bearing the happy pair passed by, the whistle on each locomotive was made to give a simultaneous blast, the like of which was never heard in that vicinity before. The hitherto concert-world have awakened the seven sleepers, as it did the echoes for miles around, scaring the urbane bridegroom out of his usual serene equanimity.

NEWS FROM EL PASO.—The Galveston Civilian of the 18th, contains a letter from El Paso, dated December 29th, which says:

Major Benjamin McCulloch and Judge Rose, of Texas, passed through this place on the 24th instant, in fine health and spirits, on their way to Sonora, Mexico.

Samuel Jones, recently appointed Collector for the port of Las Cruces, New Mexico, vice Caleb Sherman, passed through on the 26th. Mr. Jones was accompanied by his lady and two children, all well.

FEMALE SEDITION.—The British press are very distressed with forebodings of the destruction of the American Republic, through its corruption, its furious partisan spirit, and its low morality, all evils incident to universal suffrage. At the same time we find the British authorities in Ireland addressed to an extraordinary degree of vigilance and alarm by a secret meeting of twelve or fifteen Irishmen at a tavern. A meeting of one hundred times fifteen Irishmen, in secret or open session, would scarcely be noticed in this country, and scarcely attract the attention of the government, because so apprehensive of mischief is felt where a government rests upon popular suffrage. In Ireland, and even in England, it is very different, and the slightest popular movement is guarded against as an impending evil, threatening to overturn the government and the social institutions of the country. The most curious feature in this Irish element, is, that a young lady, described as "extremely delicate," has been committed to prison on a charge of writing seditious letters. A government that can be endangered by the literary effusions of a weak and debilitated girl, must exhibit more symptoms of weakness and decay than this young Republic, where women and men may speak, write and print as much abuse of the government as they please, a privilege they are by no means backward in exercising, or we should not have so many lecturing Jeremiahs traveling around the country, lamenting over the decadence of public patriotism, not read so much lugubrious twaddle in the newspapers of the decline in public morality and private virtue. These have been declining ever since sensility and conscciousness found, in a free press, a ready vehicle through which to make their complaints.—Philadelphia Ledger.

HON. W. K. SEBASTIAN.—The people of Arkansas, as well as the South, are familiar with the name that forms the caption to this article. Mr. Sebastian has been honored and promoted by the Democrats of this State to one of the most creditable positions within the gift of the people. In this responsible station he has in no instance betrayed the confidence of his constituents, been negligent of their interest, or deviated from his whole duty towards Arkansas, but has faithfully, steadily and consistently devoted his labors and talents for their welfare. The Democrats of this State have the utmost confidence in his honesty and ability, and as an evidence of this, they but a few months since re-elected him to the United States Senate for another term of six years. Judge Sebastian is highly appreciated and much beloved by the sovereign people and unswerving Democrats of Arkansas. As an evidence that he is sensitive to the convenience and prosperity of his constituents, we copy a resolution that he submitted in the Senate as follows, to create new post routes in this State:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing post routes between the following points, viz: Pope county, Pope county, Arkansas, to Jasper, Newton county, in said State; from Ultima Thule, Sevier county, Arkansas, to Boston, Travis county, Texas; from Rosville to Columbus's Prairie, by way of Sugar Creek, all in Arkansas; from Rosseville, by Dover, Rockhill, Gesserville, Bortland and Carrollton, in Arkansas, to Forsyth, in Missouri; from Fremont, Ouachita county, Arkansas, by way of Lisbon, Atlanta and Pinson, to Varinter's; from Huntsville, in Madison county, Arkansas, to Springfield, in Missouri.—Helena Southron.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM.—Yesterday morning about 1 o'clock, a portion of the city was visited by a tornado, which for a short time was frightfully severe. It suddenly came a narrow strip of the city, running in its course from northwest to southeast, first touching the property of S. Watkins, Esq., doing considerable damage to trees and fences. It passed on thence to the Penitentiary, taking off a portion of a new roof which had just been put on. The carpenter and carriage of Tansey & Turberville suffered considerably. The shop of Jackson & Adams' shop was blown down, the stables of Mr. Nicholson were demolished, and the roof carried a distance of about one hundred yards, besides doing much damage to his kitchen and residence. A number of other buildings were more or less damaged. The roof was partially taken from the residence of W. O'N. Perkins.

The families thus bereft of their roofs, and exposed from their shelter, have been further accommodated by therain which accompanied and succeeded the wind. In the Southern part of the city the new Baptist Church, on Cherry street, suffered most severely. His building was in progress, and the walls of the sides were both blown down to the top of the basement story, being about eighteen feet in hight and sixty feet in length. The aggregate damage will reach several thousand dollars.—Nashville Patriot, Jan. 22.
