POETICAL.

DRINKING GOOT OLT RYE.

A DUTCH SONG.

If a poody drinks a goody
Mit some good ole rye,
Oh it's poody drinks his poody
Dempsicum on der eity!
Or if some vriend, vandel mother
Drinks till he pain high!
Shtand der liquor shmell he pother?
Ho smil, vell no!
[Cheruse—all sing.]
Rinty poddle loves his toddy,
Frandy, gin, or vine,
Rinty van has got a bottle,
Goot ole rye ish mine.

Sweet der children I embrace meet
Dopse Deutschman on der shtreet;
Ta I' von of dem should shtand dreat,
It's goot ole rye for me
Or all der drinks, dere's none, I thinks,
So goot can vet ole fry;
Dere's nothing, ven your shpirits sinks,
Can raise dem like oil rye.
Rinty poddy loves his toddy,
Frandy, chin, or vine;
Ole rye van has got a bottle,
Goot ole rye ish mine.

Ven vimmin is vimmin den ol I rush
To Mynheer's liquor shanty,
Put dere I neber trinks too much,
A quart shmall, ze to more.
Ve on der shtreet I happy go,
Dough in der shtreets I die.
Ho all dem vimmin ish nice to see
Ven trinking goot ole rye.
Rinty poddy loves his toddy,
Don ty shoudn't I?
Ole mother van has got his bottle:
Mine ish goot ole rye.

LIFE IN WASHINGTON.

One of the most recherche and elegant entertainments of the season came off last evening at the residence of Gen. Cass—Mr. and Mrs. Ledyard, daughter and son-in-law of Gen. C., issuing the cards and doing the honors on this occasion.

It is not perhaps generally known that the home of this distinguished statesman is enriched with priceless treasures of art. Mr. Cass, jr., has resided many years at Rome as American Ambassador, and seems to have endeared himself to the Italian nobility by rendering them important services during the revolution, and in return has received for kindness rendered during that distracting period, as presents, many exquisite gems of art, which no amount of money could have procured. These, with the opportunities Mr. C. has had for collecting chef d'œuvres of the great masters, have been for years added to his father, forming a collection more rare and splendid than can be found in this country.

On entering the drawing-rooms, last evening, we were struck with the air of elegance and refinement. The light was profuse, but it came softened through the glass shades, and while every object in the room was distinctly and minutely visible, the effect of moonlight was not more soft and dreamy. Do you feel a desire to join us, dear reader, to look around with us, and have upon your wonderful sight:

Aye o'er your their enthroned light,
The life-like statue, and the breathing bust,
The art that rescued from cerbian dust,
And the Grecian Gallery of the Graces
Immortal spirits, in whose deathless sons
Poesy and science are blended in one
While in their tangibles eloquence they tell
Of some Raphael, Vandyke or Mulier
Titian till he pain high!
Shtand der liquor shmell he pother?
Ho smil, vell no!
[Cheruse—all sing.]
Rinty poddle loves his toddy,
Frandy, gin, or vine,
Rinty van has got a bottle,
Goot ole rye ish mine.

Ven vimmin is vimmin den ol I rush
To Mynheer's liquor shanty,
Put dere I neber trinks too much,
A quart shmall, ze to more.
Ve on der shtreet I happy go,
Dough in der shtreets I die.
Ho all dem vimmin ish nice to see
Ven trinking goot ole rye.
Rinty poddy loves his toddy,
Don ty shoudn't I?
Ole mother van has got his bottle:
Mine ish goot ole rye.
