Daily Appeal.

THE PURPOSES OF THE OPPOSITION.

Political organizations entered into, the better to carry out certain measures as the latent of a given theory of government, are not only consistent with the true spirit of our institutions, but necessary to their successful working. Individual combinations and factious alliances brought about with a view to the promotion of men, or the elevation of personal influence to power, thereby to secure to the parties private gain, are destructive in their tendencies, and can never be successful while the people retain that degree of intelligence and patriotism requisite to self-government. A party organized upon distinct and avowed principles, ought and will triumph over all combinations of men whose acknowledged purpose is no other than the attainment of office and the securing of public patronage. And it is between such a party and such a combination that the issue to be tried by the people of Kentucky in August next.

The Democratic party has enunciated its doctrines and published its faith, published its theory of our Republicanism, defined the measures by which that theory is to be carried out, and indicated its policy of governmental administration. Competent and reliable representatives of the party are nominated for State office, and appeal from this platform to the people for their suffrages. Against this party and these candidates is arrayed a personal combination, who stand upon no other platform than opposition.

The people, we mean the masses who are more interested in the prosperity and success of the Republic than the promotion of men, will ask what are the principles of this Opposition? The slaveholders of the South, who have united in support of the Democratic party, as the only organization possessing the strength to cope with sectionalism, will ask why is an opposition offered to that party in a southern State? We think the true answer to these very pertinent inquiries can be given, and when generally understood, will serve to prostrate the combination.

It is evident, and it can serve no good purpose to ignore the fact, that a concerted movement has been instituted in Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, to array as formidable an opposition to the Democratic party as possible. Conventions have been or will be held in each of these States, and candidates chosen for the various offices. It will not be asserted that movement is actuated by the fairest hopes of success in either of these localities. No sane man anticipates any other result in August than the triumph of the Democratic party in every southern State where elections are to be held. The present organization and combination of the Opposition elements has other objectives for wherever purposes. It is a part of the programme for 1860. Its purposes are better yet to be indicated in the significance of its shadowy boldness, as if not treasonable to the section, and unfaithful to their constituents. The Richmond Whig, recognized as the prominent organ of the Opposition, outlines the whole platform in a recent article, from which we copy:

"All eyes, everywhere, are now anxiously fixed upon the opening campaign in the Old Dominion. And especially is this the case with our Whig and American friends in each and all the southern States. They are looking to their allies here in Virginia to put in successful motion a ball which shall continue to roll, and increase in velocity, until victory crowns the united conservative Opposition of the Union in the great Presidential battle of 1860. If we give a good account of ourselves in Virginia in May next, the Opposition in every southern State will be inspired with new courage and new hopes, and will at once fall into line, perfect their organization, and make a united fight in their State elections, at the present year and the next. And the result of such a fight in all the southern States, immediately preceding the opening of the Presidential campaign, should be such as to gratify to the extreme every conservative, Union-loving man in the whole land. The influence, indeed, of the contest upon the South depends upon the Presidential contest cannot now be realized. Whether the Opposition in these elections are completely successful or not, will make but small difference. The main and most important object is to show to our conservative friends at the North that there is still a formidable and determined conservative party in the South that has no sympathy with the hogus Democracy of the day, and that is ready and willing to unite with them in a combined and energetic effort to elect a conservative and national statesman to the Presidency next year; to show that the conservative Whigs and Americans at the South have no thought of allowing themselves to be absorbed in the Democratic party, but are resolved to forever hold aloof from their reckless and unprincipled organizations, and act in good faith and act all times with conservative everywhere. These are the vital objects to be accomplished by a united and manly fight, on the part of the southern Opposition, at the coming elections."

The Louisville Journal, a worthy ally and confidant of the Whig, copies and approves this article, and says of it:

"The Whig is right; and, whether we achieve positive victory in all instances or not, we shall thoroughly accomplish these 'vital objects.' Victory in some substantial shape is assured to us, if we do but put forth our energies."

The reader will observe that success in these State elections is not anticipated, nor indeed important to the success of the plot. No purely sectional party can ever succeed, and all that is sought is to nationalize the Republican party. "Whether the Opposition in these State elections are completely successful or not, will make small difference." The main and large one object is to show to the Republican Opposition that they have allies and friends in the south, and "if we but put forth our energies" says the Journal, "whether we achieve positive victory or not, these vital objects will be accomplished, and victory in some substantial shape is assured." The avowed purpose then of the Opposition in the South, is to circulate, inspire and encourage the Republicans of the North, to give a show of nationality to their party, and to "put them for the Presidential battle of 1860. The movement in Kentucky is made for the benefit of the consolidated Opposition, and with a view to defeat a Democratic nominee. The hope is not to succeed, but to make a good fight, to evince a formidable strength, desectionalize the Republican party, and give it moral force, respectability and character, to enter the national arena for the next Presidential election.

We accept the issue, and willingly for one, would rest these State elections upon its merits before the people. Let the August vote in Kentucky be made to test the sentiment of our people upon the consolidation movement, and let it be understood in the true significance of their action. Let it be distinctly announced to every opponent of "Modern Democracy," that his vote will go to encourage, stimulate and inspire the Republican party, and the voice of Kentucky, in August, will tell upon the result in 1860. Make the issue here now between the Democratic party and the amalgamated Opposition, which is proposed to be arrayed against it in the next national struggle. We rather like the turn, and would be glad to see the issue tried in the press. It is but fair and just, certainly, but if such a significance is to be attached to our August election, the people should know it.

HORRIBLE OUTRAGE IN CANADA.

BUFFALOES AVENGING THEMSELVES UPON A FEMALE WRECKER.

The Montreal Gazette has particulars of the recent outrage at St. Jerome, Canada, upon Mrs. Barron, who was abducted and maltreated by robbers in revenge for her testimony in a criminal trial. One of the gang, Thibault, has been caught and turned State's evidence. The Gazette says:

It appears that on the night of the 26th of January last, (which was a most boisterous, snowy and windy one,) in pursuance of a plot and conspiracy between four men named Alfred Hamelin, Jean Baptiste Grattan, Louis Thibault and Jean Martin, they assembled at the house of Grattan to commit the deed, but it appears that the conspirators had also a house where their intended victim, Rosalie Barron, wife of Joseph Foncault, was spending the evening, and at about midnight the project was abandoned for that time, but with the understanding that the deed would be perpetrated the following night. Martin had made a wooden yoke to put on the victim's neck, and brought it to Hamelin's house. The four conspirators were bound by a most solemn understanding to divulge nothing on pain of death.

On the following night, 27th January, Hamelin, Grattan and Thibault left Hamelin's house in a sleigh at 11 o'clock, and drove to the house of Mons. Foncault, where she was peacably in bed with her husband and children, being in the house at the time robbed by her two little children, aged eleven and twelve years. Thibault was left in charge of the sleigh, whilst Hamelin and Grattan forced their way into the house, which was only fastened inside by a nail over the latch. Foncault, who is feeble and aged over sixty years, jumped out of bed and held near a window, whilst Grattan forcibly carried his wife, barefoot and in her chemise, to the sleigh (a frolicsome) dragging her along in the snow. The whole was joined by Hamelin, and the party drove off some twenty-five acres distance to the stable of Benjamin Lacasse, a respectable farmer, where they shut her up. On the road Grattan got scarfed of her, and, aided by Hamelin, tied her hands with a rope tightly behind her body; they shaved and polled off a portion of her hair, and when she cried out they struck her most brutally in the face, and threatened to kill her. She still keeps entire of this violence; and in trying to silence her, they tore her mouth on both sides, and so wounded her in the face that she was all covered with blood. On reaching the stable, she was again dragged in the snow the distance of six perches, and made to go on her knees in the stable, and beg pardon, and promise that she would not again go out at night.

While Grattan was engaged in these acts of brutality, she bit his right thumb, the marks of which are still plain upon it. Blood was near the stable, and a portion of her hair found the following morning in the snow. She was then locked up and left, saying, as he heard or felt, and in her night-shirt, in Lacasse's stable, in the still nearest the door, the floor of which she covered with snow and ice—indeed the snow had accumulated around the unfortunate woman, and in that state she remained until six o'clock the next morning, when discovered by Mons. Lacasse on going to feed his cattle. Mons. Lacasse had to give her her own clothes to conceal her personal, she was conducted to the house of Lacasse, where every possible care was bestowed upon her. Mons. Foncault was, as may be supposed, so exhausted as to be hardly able to speak, and cried out, "Oh sacrilege! Oh, for God's sake, come to my assistance; it is Hamelin and his man who have done this; I am dying."

She was so disfigured with blood that although well acquainted with her, she could not be recognized until she named herself.

Hamelin, Grattan, Martin and Thibault were immediately arrested, and the three former have been committed to jail by Messrs. De Montigny and Lavallee.

Mons. Foncault and her husband had distinctly recognized Hamelin and Grattan. Thibault acknowledged the whole, turned Queen's evidence, and was admitted to bail to give evidence at the trial on the 24th March. Martin is the same individual who was tried for the murder of his wife some years ago and acquitted.
