PEACE OF MIND. DELIGHTFUL GUEST AND DWELL WITH ME.

Delightful visitant, hast thou
Some sweet abode in mortal breast?
Can there be one so lone and desolate
But there your thought for more approved
Again may wander free
Shut the calm home where
Darkness in long lash reigns,
Or where the storm that lowers there
And on one on cheerful blessings chase
And scatter the heart's peace.

Though hope is far more bright,
Her promises deceive;
While fancy in their sunny light
Her promised pleasures take their flight,
And leave the heart to grieve.

Then come, delightful guest,
And dwell again with me,
From dark despair my heart release,
And bid my troubled feeling cease
I long to live for thee.

FEBRUARY 28th, 1859. JENNIES

LIFE IN WASHINGTON.

From the Washington Union, March 3.

It had been known for a week previous, in our gay world, that they would have liberty on Monday evening, February 22, to stroll in Mrs. Sarratt's Thompson's beautiful rooms, and refresh themselves with a delightful hall in her supper apartment. This privilege collected together some two or three hundred persons; but it was three hundred, and which one hundred and fifty received sufficient gratification in an opportunity of meeting the other one hundred and fifty. Few parties of the season have risen in richness the one which we now purpose sketching. People collected together to enjoy themselves more than to exhibit new dresses, or criticise those of their friends. The tested entertainment a supper, happy evening, and if frustrated in their expectations, the fault was not here with the amiable hostess, nor with her elegant entertainment.

By ten o'clock Mrs. T. was receiving all that is distinguished in society under her roof; Senators, ambassadors, diplomats, judges, citizens, civil and military. Her dress on this occasion deserves at our hands, we think, more than a passing notice. A robe of cherry-colored crape, the scalloped edged with a rose pattern, and over each flounce was a full of costly Mechlin lace, extending to the thickly-edged border. Encircling her hair was the most lovely wreath of white roses, so real looking that you could almost fancy you smelt their fragrance and heard the south wind go softly rushing to and out among the rare white leaves. A gorgeous diamond necklace, which flash'd and sparkled like a sunbeam, and an exquisite "pocket" handkerchief completed her very elegant attire.

Miss Lane was in white illusion, with a bouquet which perfumed the air with its sweetness. Every flower which blooms in the Executive conservatory, was there displayed—stately white hyacinths, gaining golden-tressed blossoms, ivy, and winter aconite; and, crowning all, sweet rose buds and purpled-eyed violets.

Among the gentlemen guests are two who seem "marked men." As they pass along, mammas whisper significantly to daughters, and daughters to mammas. They are both of a certain age, and both "bachelor Senators." One, General Matt Ward, of Texas, is a widower, whose fine fortune has been magnified by the gossips into half a million. He seems to his appearance an air of unmistakable refinement; indeed, the word gentleman seems made to apply to him. He bears already in our city the weight of a high social situation, and receives infinite credit upon the State he represents. His companion, Senator Clingman, of North Carolina, exhibits a more careless carriage, and his dress—seen in the Senate, during the sum of committees, petitions, and dinners, characterize both his face and figure. Since the election of those gentlemen to the Senate they have been the standard beaux of the season, and the Senate gallery the focus of attraction. For the first time our most politics hating belle is gone invested in position of their sympathies in the vicissitudes of political life. They affect a sudden order in the welfare of the nation, and are curious to know who those "wicked Senators "quit off" with, and the character of every "position" they present. Their interest in the proceedings of that dignified body is no longer restricted to their "ayes" and "noes."

Following close in the rear of the bachelor Senators comes one who seems equally marked by the finger points of the gossiping fates. He is small, slight in figure, and his costume is subdued by a chastier taste than falls to the ordinary members of his profession (the diplomatic.) A delicate folds of white muslin, arranged in a not minutiae bow, form his cravat, while a stylish drawing-room chapeau, under his arm, and the adaption of his coat to a well-shaped figure is a master piece of art. This gentleman, the bachelor Spanish Minister (Mr. Tassara), is a native of Spain, with Castilian blood in his veins. The dark complexion common to his country has been subdued, probably by his literary habits, into a paleness which seems almost fair by the contrast of the dark brown lawn and silken tresses of his head. He is known here as a man of fine literary acquirements, with poetical talent of a high order. He seems to speak other languages as fluently as his native tongue, and is as perfectly at home in his replies to the compliments of the French Minister, and the courtly jargon of the Italian Ambassador, as when fowing to the over-civilities of his American admirers.

The comings and goings of the three gentlemen we have described, attract no little attention. Most of the the distinguished lions seem not at all alarmed at the alarming accession of social importance. The gentleman from North Carolina is a bachelor—so kind to those good ones who have waited patiently for him ever shakes his heart; while his refined colleague is wise enough to take things as he finds them, without any inquiry as to motives, and the Senator is too experienced a diplomat to notice those overwhelming attentions. Though apparently unconscious, he knows he draws down his lines carotic coils, and smiles.

Among the belles whom the gentlemen buttered about like an insect fitting round a flower, is Miss Lane, daughter of Mr. Senator Dickinson—a fair, cheerful sensible girl, in whose presence there is something besides beauty, and more than beauty to think of. Miss K. is beautifully dressed in white French muslin, the graceful flowing skirt looped up with blue roses. Miss B——, daughter of the member from Tennessee, was decked in a lovely rose-colored illusion, with a coronet of pearls encircling her head; her glossy hair somewhat disheveled, as if the replyers took an impish delight in ruffling it, to the envy more than elsewhere. The very d sorder of a truant lock only seemed to add a grace. There is a faint color, like the first blush of dawn on her lovely complexion, and a grace and sweetness of manner in her.

Mr. ——, the distinguished Senator from New York, was there in his accustomed place, and seemed to be the observed of all observers. Mrs. Thompson may congratulate herself upon the success and elegance of this the closing fete of the season.

Will there be an Extra Session—Manner of Making the Pacific Payments—How the Department may get Along, etc.

Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.]

WASHINGTON, March 4, P. M.—The question will flge now is, "will there be an extra session?" As the failure of the pacific appropriation bill spring from the antagonism of the two houses, and not from opposition to the President, he will of course seek to avoid a called session if possible.

It is to be observed that the mail service is quarterly. The first quarter of the next fiscal year will end the 13th of September next, and as by the terms of all contracts the Department reserves the privilege of paying upon the second fourth succeeding, or on the month ending the 30th day of November, it will be seen that demands for the second quarter's service cannot be made until some weeks after Congress shall assemble at its regular session. Add to this the other fact that contractors collect generally half their pay on an average from Postmasters on their respective routes in advance of settlement at the Department, it is reasonable to suppose that the amount of funds in hand they will not suffer much from delay in payments subsequently required, provided that Congress, at its next meeting, promptly provides for their cases. The ships might get on tolerably, if it were not for a deficit for the present fiscal year of rising three millions, as well as the fact that as fast as they are so appropriations for overland and Pacific steamship service. [The steamship service is alleged, however, to be provided for in part.] It may also be held by the Chief Justice that money accruing after June 13th is so in the treasury as that it cannot be drawn out except by authority of law, as contemplated by the act which has just failed. A.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1859.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

An imperative sense of duty compels me to make an appeal to Congress to preserve the credit of the country. This is the last day of the present Congress, and no provision has yet been made for the payment of appropriations, and to meet the outstanding treasury notes issued under the authority of law. From the information which has already been communicated to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, it is manifest that the ordinary receipts into the treasury, even under the most favorable circumstances, will scarcely meet the ordinary expenses of the Government during the remainder of the present fiscal year, ending on the 30th June. At that time nearly eighteen millions of treasury notes will have become due, and many of these not yet due are daily paid for duties at the different ports, and there will be no means in the treasury to meet them. Thus the country, which is full of resources, will be dishonored before the world, and the American people, who are a debt-paying people, will be disgraced by the omission on our part to do our duty. It is impossible to avoid the catastrophe, unless we make provision this very day to meet the lawful demands on the public treasury. If this were the first instance of the last session of a Congress, the case would be different. But it might have been averred by proclamation for to-morrow morning. But there are now thirteen States of the Union, entitled to seventy-eight representatives, in which no laws have been passed. It will, therefore, be impracticable for a large majority of these States to elect their members before the treasury shall be compelled to stop payment.

Under these circumstances, I earnestly recommend to Congress to make provision, within the few remaining hours of the session, for the preservation of the public credit. The urgency of the case not only justifies but demands that, if necessary, this shall be done by a separate bill. We ought to incur no risk when the good faith of the country is at stake.

$200 Reward.

RAN AWAY from the subscriber, near Coldwater, Mississippi, on the night of the 28th of February, two negro men, named ALEXANDER and ROBERT.

Lander is black, intelligent and remarkably well formed, is about five feet ten or eleven inches high, a carious walk, small beard and mouth, with decidedly African features, and is about twenty-five years of age.

Robert is decidedly black, about 5 feet 9 or 10 inches in height, very slender, walks erect, not very intelligent, and with an uneasy expression of countenance; aged about 18 or 19 years.

For Lander, I will give fifty dollars, if caught in the adjoining counties, and the reward offered by the State for Robert, if caught in the above counties; or one hundred and fifty dollars for Lander, and fifty dollars for Robert, provided they are delivered to me, or lodged in some safe jail so I can get them.

Lander has recently been employed on the Memphis and New Orleans packets, and will try to reach a free State by steamboat. O. M. PLANTON

Evening Drawing and Painting School.

THE following useful and elegant accomplishments, taught by a practical teacher, commence Monday, March 7th, P. M. See samples of Landscapes at Street, Brooks in Hadley's Hall, and such dimensions that if fossilized he would afford grounds to Cuvier for a new theory upon the regeneration of mankind.

Among the discordant jar of voices, one was struck by the silvery accents and musical enunciation of a voice near us. The tongue rattled on with the most brilliant sallies of wit, and a laugh now and then came ringing from its coral and pearly fastenings like a Swiss bell. And yet this brilliant woman, whose sparkling repartee fascinates a circle of listeners, is in her true sphere—a woman in the sheltered nook for which her God has fitted and adorned her. She is the beloved of one, and her care-worn husband finds in her the indulgent friend, in whose society his overtaxed energies can find repose, in whom he can confide his little grievances of the world, and listen in return to histories of colors that will not blend; or any other of the trivialities that become important when prattled about by rosy lips to willing ears. This interesting person (Mrs. Senator Clay, of Alabama,) wore a rich white brocade and pearls, which well became her poetical face.

We are among the guests the amiable face of Mr. McC——, an esteemed correspondent for a distinguished journal—one of that band of men who, like the laborers on the Egyptian Pyramids, have too often only a mess of leeks, while milk, honey, and oil are the portion of those for whom they toil.

Sweet Hattie B——, of the "West end," is here in simple white, with natural white flowers in her jetty tresses. She is her quiet and unpretending, shows of every one but herself, and has a bewitching blush and smile, and eyes darkly and divinely blue.

We know among the guests the deep, clear, piercing eyes and disheveled hair of Georgia's distinguished son, (Senator Toombs,) and the picture-like eyes, with their large white veiling lids, of Mr. Yulee. The Supreme Court of our city was represented by the great Maryland pleader, Mr. Reverdy Johnson—a gentleman who shows his brilliant talents by virtues as rare as they are amiable.

Miss R——, daughter of Captain B——, of the navy, was in blue brocade, looking paler and more delicately beautiful than ever; and Mrs. Gwin, in a gorgeous blue silk, the fashion stamped with superb bouquets of velvet.

Our Journal world was represented by Messrs. Biggs and Clubb—the lady of the latter, her sweet, mild-faced woman, dressed with much elegance in simple white.

Among the guests from the State, niece of Hon. John M. Clayton—a lovely-looking girl, with lilies in her hair. How the sight of her recalled our early home, a vision of former days, with all its associations of detail. We saw nothing of what was present, but the Brandywine poured forth its minstrelsy in our ears, and we rambled through fragrant paths, with little baskets, to seek for nests of delicate wood-sorrels, or stood beneath old oaks, linking white-petalled blossoms together; or mellowing in a brown nook of shade, to see the green willows, wet as the immersion in the deep transparent water beneath.

The Washington bar was represented by Mr. Phillips, of our city, and the diplomatic world by Dr. Green and Dr. Richards. Mrs. Judge Merrick, of the District Court, was in blue brocade; and Mrs. Clement Hill, of the "West End," in a school girl, with velvet bounces.

Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee; Gov. McCrea and Mr. Jowdin, of Mississippi; Mr. Garnett, of Virginia; and the gallant and talented delegate from Arkansas, Lieut. Mowry, in whose character we see the fairest flowers of noble manhood—talent and energy on one side, the model "gentleman" on the other—were all prominent in their attention to the belles of the evening.

There was a sweet pensive Spanish face, Miss M——, of Cadiz, daughter of the late Mr. Maury; and Mrs. Faulkner, in a gorgeous brocade, and Mrs. Senator Brown, in black velvet.

At 12 o'clock, the supper room was thrown open, and a beautiful table presented, with cakes, meats, and salads of the finest quality, wet from sparkling jellies, fruits, and wines of every brand. Mrs. Thompson may congratulate herself upon the success and elegance of this the closing fete of the season.

A Valuable Tract of Cotton Lands for Sale containing 1400 Acres.

I HAVE for sale a tract of land, containing four hundred and twenty acres, situated in St. Francis county, Arkansas, in township three north, of range four east, in sections three, four, five and eight. This tract is in a compact body, fronting one half mile on St. Francisco, two miles below Lingle, and nine miles below Madison, the point at which the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad crosses said river. Upon this tract of land there are eighty acres in cultivation, and one hundred and sixty acres well deadened; and fencing is four years old. This land is unexcelled in point of fertility and desirableness of location. For terms of sale, apply to O. B. Caldwell, near the premises, or to Wm. Park, or John Gantenbein, Memphis, or to J. T. Rose, at Helena, or to me, at Louisville, Kentucky.
