POETICAL.

TO SPRING.

BY ALBERT PIKE.

O thou delicious Spring!
Winged in the lap of rain and subtle showers,
With the full firmament that yet seems near with
From odorous belts of rain-enriched flowers,
And green grass
That over grassy walks the gray pavements cling.
Come, gentle Spring!

Thou inner of young wind,
That cometh from the invisible upper sea
Beneath the dry, which cleeds (in white tent, tent,
And, settling by the tent-dripping,
Make young leaves dance with glee,
Even in the teeth of the cold, sower wind,
Winter wakes.

Come to us! for thou art
Like the face of a child, gentle Spring!
Touching the sacred fretted of the heart,
Or like a virgin's glamour, wandering
And deep over our being
A tide of gentle and resistless art
Upon the heart.

And a union from the south
Cometh with thee! Wind, may be show!
When we are gathered and sit, and yet month,
And known cheeks, in the cold frost of snow,
Come, gentle Spring!
Bring with thy gentle flowers their primal growth,
And greenness youth!

Our Summer comforts thee!
And yet he is lonely, look on thee!
What in his ever-growing, there are,
In the green leaf that the fitch shows?
Thou wakest most divine,
What may he fall and thoughts wanderer
Compare with thee!

Come, gentle spirit, come!
And bid the wilding streams leap down their side,
And green the ways with the eight-smelling rime;
And wake the flowers from the sky shall glide,
Answer! Come! Come!

I feel will breathe of the delicious thrills
In your hidden.

After! bright Spring, no less
Shall I adore thy gentle influence;
For thou and the Summer are the best seers,
Sublimed to enjoy in the lovelier,
And your coming
Kindle the soul to earth being,
Large in size.

So I who also shall die;
Were unto death, purchased, by care and sorrow;
And, fainting thee with no unconscious sigh,
Bring back the joyous hours
Which now sometimes I borrow
And breathe of lovelier Summer and more high.
Coming to sigh!

A Young American at Sebastopol.

We are favored with sight of a letter from G. E. Waldron, of Boston, who is now at Sebastopol engaged with the Boston company there in raising the sunken ships. A stormy voyage and almost a wreck on his first attempt to cross the Black sea added to the interest of, or the pleasure of the voyage. The Americans at Sebastopol were very glad to see him, but he could tell them little of home, having been absent two years. Of the means used for raising the sunken ships and the progress already made, he writes:

The crane, which raises the vessels whole and the steamer a Turk and Greenaway; the Greaney has copper boilers which are worth $25,000 to cut up. They are now breaking her up and taking her out piece by piece. Some my arrival, they have raised the Dunaile, another steamer. She is of iron and came up in two halves. The chain, in attempting to raise her, or her cutting it in half. Her engines are valued at $40,000. They have also raised a 16 gun brig and two large schooners. Col. Gowan has made a contract with the Russians to have all the property that he recovers, and he is to find all the powder and purchase it of the Government at their price. This contract came to Gowan in June, but was not signed until November 20.

The first one, that the government should have one half of the property and find all the powder. The price of powder here of the government is $10 per 36 pounds. They have already sent eight tons of powder upon the Constantine, and it will need as much more before one is all put up. The appearance of the ships upon reaching the surface is singular enough, after their long sojourn in their steady bed. The rails are all mossy-combed, the decks are covered with mud to the depth of two feet, and the masts are all rotten, and the weather-beaten hulks are covered with the green moss all over the decks. The hatches in most cases are open and the hold half full of mud, and the water is seeping in every part but the copper. Many of the ships were burnt before sinking.

The method that the company have adopted for raising the vessels is by means of four large "cans or," with small steam engines of fifteen horse power upon each. Two of these cansons are affixed each side of the sunken ship, they then have chains passed under her keel leading up to the docks, or cansons; by opening a submerged valve these decks are sank in an instant, and then the chain is then hauled up by aid of the steam engine. The water is then pumped out and the decks examined, and the engine at the same time is used to raise a length of no ordinary size. Just the experience of last summer has convinced them that there is not power enough to raise large ships, at present, under the directions of Mr. S. Holbrook, the company are endeavoring two other large ones, which will be completed next spring. With this and the other they expect to raise large ships of eighty guns.

Before I close, I will say a few things about places of note around here, which have been visited by the Americans. I mean those visited the Inkerman Mountain. To the summit of the hill it is about 150 feet. The ground is all dug up, and cannot be ploughed. The ancient remains of its tower are still standing. Near to the Mahakoff is the Redan, which is nothing more than a trench, deep trench; here and there the ground is covered with the gallant dead; all around is strewed with pieces of shells, and the other day, as I was walking along upon the edge of "Victoria Battery," I saw a piece of shell above its parapet in depth the skeleton of an Engishmen, which had been buried by part of the battery slid up upon the top. Some of the bones of the foot, and instep I took home from Constantinople. I have also been to Balaklava.

There has been a great number of accidents here lately, and many lives lost; some thirteen or more women have been killed the past year. A young Englishman belonging to the steamer Prince, arrived here last spring, with some of his shipmates, was walking over the Black Rock, and picked up a shell with the fuse cut and taking it home with him, but bidding his friends to stand from under, when it was pulled, killing him instantly. A party of Tartars had kindled a fire around the round shot, as they termed, and had placed their kettle upon the top of it, when one of them, being short, pulled it, falling and scalding a number of them. A few days ago, a party of Russians were engaged in building old boats for shipment, off a hill of a sudden one of them exploded, killing one man in a frightful manner. This occurred within twenty yards of our house.

The Wine Production in Europe.

The annual commercial Union circumvolant of the New York Commercial Advertiser, in his letter to that journal, dated February 16, says:

From every part of France details daily arrive of increased military and naval preparations. The spirit of the people is fully belying on. The same rise and financial classes in vain endeavor to stem the tide, and are rapidly losing ground in the public estimation. It is also in the requisite feeling of irritation will be caused to induce the country to plunge into anything. At present the mouth of April seems to be mentioned as the time for action. If April and May are allowed to pass, there may yet be hope for the year. About twelve months back, when almost equal alarm was given, I mentioned to your readers that if we could get over the spring, we might look in a tremble till 1859. A similar feeling now seems to be entertained, but the hope of equally favorable result is held on by a minority.

It is believed that the Government are at length fully and rightly convinced that mischief is at hand. In both Houses of Parliament the same feeling may be clearly discovered. Among officers of the Army and Navy, there is less reliability and on the subject, and this discretion is a consequence of the same; each man has that he knows his neighbor's thought, and that we hold here in the Commons cannot get ready as soon as possible.

There is nothing in the Italian question to inspire his general distrust. It arises from a feeling that there is a foreign element in it, an fear of a revival of the attempt of the first Napoleon, that the Italian question is merely a pretext, and that its pretext is to embroil another and another will be manufactured until the desire is satisfied. Positive intelligence has been received that Austria, under the Emperor Francis, will consent to refer any point in dispute to diplomatic adjustment. This, of course, should remove all fears of war, if there does not lie other ground than that which has then far been avowed. For people look to Cherbourg, and are cognizant that the Italian question has not had anything to do with a great part of that work. They also recollect that nearly twenty years ago the Emperor announced to France that he regretted the principle, "peace, and a defeat. The principle was universal suffrage, the cause that of the empire, the defeat, Waterloo.

While the sittings of the publicans turned in this direction, Europe is favored with a new Pamphlet—not avowedly of imperial manufacture, but from a quarter quite as significant. Its title is La Guerre, and its author, M. Emile de Girardin. Now, de Girardin is always experts in the use of national movements, and the Emperor knows the pen to be a very useful weapon. The Italian Question, in its diplomatic sense, has failed. Fresh embroiles must be aroused. The potentates who crushed the Roman republic fade like evanescent meteors, and are forgotten. Humanism now takes a wider field and regenerate not a portion but the whole of Europe. Russia is to be his sole partner; Europe must be divided into two grand sections. Half of the East and that of the West. All the nationalities would willingly submit themselves to these two powers. Egypt and Syria would volume Cobden and Bright could be brought into government, but if so, she must be coerced. She must be driven from the commerce of the channel and deprived of every vital station. "Arabia," de Girardin says, "is a work worthy of Napoleon the Third. It would be a war that would not cost its cost, war that would avenge Waterloo—a war that would give to France the lost frontiers, and place Europe in equilibrium.

The Winter of the Heart.

Let it never come upon you. Live so that good angels may protect you from this terrible evil—the winter of the heart.

Let no chilling influence freeze up the foundations of sympathy and happiness, from its depths; let not further settle even its influence upon your heart, lest, when it may be too late, it destroy all dominion over and strike through its desolate chambers.

Your life may now lead you amid trials, which, at a time, more utterly to impede your progress, and shut out the very light of heaven from your anxious gaze.

Perhaps your home, the place of ease and plenty, you or insurance home may be exchanged for a single low room, the soft couch for a straw pallet—the rich stands for the coarse food of the poor. Poverty! Misery! may forsake you, and the enjoying world pass you with scarcely a word of commission.

You may be forced to toil hard, wearily, steadily on, to earn a livelihood; you may encounter fraud and base avarice which would extort the last farthing, till you well nigh turn in disgust from your fellow beings.

Death may never the door; the last that find you to the earth, and leave you in fearful darkness. The noble, manly boy, the sole hope of your declining years, may be taken from you, while your spirit clings to him with a wild tenacity which even the shadow of the tomb cannot wholly subdue.

But amid all the sorrows, do not come to the conclusion that nobody was ever so deeply afflicted as you are, and abandon every sweet anticipation of "better days" in the unknown future.

Do not lose your faith in human nature because your confidence has been betrayed, nor believe that friendship is only a delusion, and love a bright phantom which glides away from your grasp.

Do not think you are fated to be miserable because you are disappointed in your expectations, and blighted in your affections. Do not declare that God has forsaken you, when you say it helped with tears, or repine sinful, when he calls your dear ones to the land he good the grave.

Keep a whole trust in heaven through every trial; bear adversity with fortitude, and look forward in hours of temptation and suffering. When your locks are white, your steps faltering, on the verge of Death's gloomy vale, still strive to retain the freshness and buoyancy of spirit, which would shield you from the winter of the heart.

Anecdote of Gen. Washington.

During sixty years' residence in New York, it was my custom, when the the birthday of Washington came round, to get the following anecdote inserted in one or two of the daily papers. The anecdote story is not the worse for being twice told, nor a good sermon the worse for being twice read. In 1796 I heard the farmer referred to tell the following incident; said he: "When the British army held possession of New York, and Washington, with the American army lay near West Point, one morning I went out my sorrier to bring home the cows. In passing a clump of bush wood, I heard a moaning sound, like a person in distress. On nearing the spot I heard the words of a man at prayer. I listened behind a tree. The man came forth—it was George Washington, the Captain of the Lord's hosts in North America.

This farmer was a member of the Society of Friends, who, being opposed to war under any pretext, was lukewarm, and in some cases opposed to the cause of his country. This farmer was a tory. However, having seen the General enter the camp, he went to his own house, and said to his wife, "Martha, we must not oppose this war any longer. This morning I heard one George Washington send up a prayer to heaven for his country, and I know it will be heard." This Friend dwelt between the lines of the two armies, and subsequently gave Washington many items concerning the movements of the enemy, which rendered good service to the American cause.

From this incident we may infer that Washington rose with the sun to pray for his country; he fought for her at meridian, and watched for at midnight.

Now, Mr. Printer, I advise every editor of a newspaper between Montauk Point and the Rocky Mountains, of three drops of Adam's blood in running in their veins, that they insert this anecdote in their daily or weekly journal every twenty-second of February, (Washington's birthday,) as long as trees grow and water runs.

I voted three years while Washington was President, married three years after Washington's death, I think in being naturalized enough, in all good conscience. I therefore hold myself as American to all debate and purposes. This day I enter my fifth year.—New Haven News.

A VAGRANT HEIR TO TWO MILLIONS.—The Buffalo Republic states that a Russian named Albert David, who, on the 24 of February was arrested in Buffalo for being a vagrant, is a vagrant, has fallen heir, by the death of his father, to an immense fortune in Russia valued at over two millions of dollars. The brother of the deceased was in Buffalo on the 25th ult., taking measures to affect the release of David, who, he says, came to this country four years ago with nearly two thousand dollars in his possession, one-half of which he lost by the panic, and the balance of which he squandered.

Messrs. Lownes, Orgill & Co.:

GENTLEMEN: Doors of the 1st inst., safely reply to certain questions touching the fire of my SAFE, SO. 1851, made by Messrs. Shearman & Marvin, and purchased of you two years ago from you, it before me, and I am pleased to state, as follows:

The fire was raging in the largest, that ever occurred in Memphis, there being some thirteen houses consumed, and about as many dwellings burned out in the immediate vicinity of the fire of January last.

My SAFE stood in my office on the second floor of one of the burning buildings, where it remained until the floor was burned from under it, when it fell into the cellar among the ruins, and was buried under heavy and fallen-down stones. I had previously taken from the SAFE my books and papers, having, as it, however, no single specie but and a piece of white paper, with cash memorandum upon it, to be found in the SAFE. The key in this building was very great, having burned everything to the brick walls. The SAFE remained in the ruins for several days. On raking it open, for the purpose of ascertaining its condition, I found it, to my surprise, to be cool and warm to the SAFE as to render it impossible to remove the bolts back with the key, the piece of paper and specie bag were found as perfect as when I left them, and showed no authority for the fire. I consider the SAFE as of all the papers had been left in it. The inside woodwork was also found as sound as if it was perfectly in the fire, the varnish being slightly discolored by the steam, as I understand is usual in such cases.

I feel pleasure in thus answering inquiry to the manufacturers, and think the article is one in which the public at large are seriously interested. Should I be placed in a similar situation, I would feel perfectly secure with one of the SAFES manufactured by Shearman & Marvin, for whom you are the Agents.

Very respectfully, etc.,

(Signed) WILLIAM PARK.

If You Want Negroes,

COME TO MEMPHIS.

HAVING permanently located myself in this city, and having the advantage of long experience and close observation as to the wants of the people, and how these wants are to be best supplied, I have thought it advisable to make a NEGRO MART, upon a basis more liberal and accommodating to the character these times demand, and I now offer to the public my stock, and to keep always on hand an assortment of the

VERY BEST NEGROES

that strength, number, character and quality—MEN, BOYS and GIRLS, as well Field Hands, Mechanics, Body Servants, Cooks, Washers, Seamstresses, Nurses, etc., all of which I will sell at PRIVATE SALE AND AT AUCTION.

My auctions sales will be large and frequent, differing, however, from the usual mode, in that I shall rule not frequently practiced in most auction houses—I mean short sales, but from the 1st of each month, to be located in my auction sales; but to the contrary, in all cases, sales will be made, and if any negro sold shall not be warranted as represented, then, I intend to make any auction sales a prominent feature in my business.

I shall constantly keep on hand a full and liberal patronage of my old friends and customers throughout the country. My negroes will be found as represented in my advertisement, will invariably obviate the necessity of my customers going South to purchase Negroes, Being properly accommodated, I will take to board and sell, any and all negroes consigned to my care; a moderate price will be charged for board and multiple payment made in all cases. Commissions and personal attention guaranteed satisfactory.
