THE WAR QUESTION IN EUROPE.

CIRCULARS OF THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT

Attitude of the Confederation—France likely to be forced into the Coalition against France—Bavaria Raising a Military Loan—Count Buol's Circular to the Austrian Representatives at the German Courts, etc., etc.

From the New York Herald.]

VIENNA, Feb. 5, 1859.

The serious anxiety which has affected the political atmosphere of Europe since the commencement of this year has also been seriously felt in every part of Germany. The adjustment of the grievances of Italy, and of those who desire peace, and whose efforts tend to so many important results, of which peace is the condition, general confidence in this direction has been shaken in lamentable manner. There does not exist any serious difference (ernsterfeis) between the Powers which can exp ain this anxiety, but the fears which have manifested themselves seem the less inclined to yield to a more favorable appreciation of the state of things, as they cannot be traced to legitimate causes.

If this general feeling of uncertainty is to be deeply regretted, a salutary effect, and which it is impossible not to recognize, has, on the other hand, been produced by the unanimity and decision with which public opinion in Germany, in view of the possibility of war, which appeared certain, has pronounced itself in favor of an energetic operation.

This fact, which none can deny, is a bright and satisfactory light in the old darkness of the present moment.

The language of German statesmen, as of the press, has unhesitatingly proved the impression that Germany would look upon itself as threatened as a united Power (Gesammtmacht), if Austria, by an unjust attack on her possessions in Italy, should find herself called upon to take up arms against one of the greatest military Powers in Europe. The convictions of the whole of Germany have united in an energetic protest against a return to the days of the Confederation of the Rhine. With a common consent, which commands respect, public opinion has declared that if the repeat of the public law of Europe should threaten a German Power, even should it only be at first in her non-German possessions, all her allies ought to make common cause with her, so as to preserve peace by the moral force of so powerful a union, and in case, against all expectation, that result should not be attained, would in common protect from attack the possessions of a member of the Confederation, as well as the sanctity of the territory of Germany at the same time, the honor, the dignity, the safety, and the power of united Germany.

Under these circumstances, not a few German cabinets have expressed to us their wish to examine closely by what firm determination, and in what form a joint line of action, in case of an attack on Austria, could be adopted so as t. be prepared at a moments notice. On various sides our opinion has been sought on the state of affairs, especially as whether it would be possible to procure a declaration from the constitutional authority of the German Confederation, or to prepare resolutions for eventual adoption by that collective body. The guiltless is to make confidentially known to our allies our views upon the necessities of the present situation.

The situation shows an improvement in the political symptoms which indicate in a more restricted manner the existence of a danger of immediate war, but at the same time, by the absence of all guaranty that the explosion of war in Italy may take place at any moment, under any pretext whatever, and again threaten, in a serious manner, the peace of Europe. Faithful to its moderation and love of peace, the Austrian cabinet has all its efforts to prevent site or complications. But we cannot close our eyes to the fact that, as long as the policy of hostile preparations is being carried, contrary to the law of nations, and calculates upon war and revolution, war presents as the possible consequence of our firm resolution to defend and ever attack the the rights of Austria in Italy, as resulting from treaties.

Under these circumstances we ought, in truth, to attach a great value to the knowledge that the convention is indubitably affirmed in Europe that Germany, closely united, will not suffer our south attack.

We do not deduce from this, it is true, the consequence that the convenient moment for a deliberation to be opened at Frankfort, and for the positive resolutions of the Germanic Confederation, has already arrived.

It is very necessary here to take into consideration the effect resulting so much abroad the under the interior situation of the Confederation and the forced influence of these considerations, we incline for the moment to the opinion that the firm establishment of the union of Germany with Austria, in case of war, should not invest itself with the obligatory forms of the Federal constitution so long as the relations of the eventality, in view of which that union is foreseen, is not displayed in a decided manner. But we do not want to give the assurance that the opinions which our cabinet has may entertain upon this essential point must have in the first instance their due weight upon our political resolutions. Let no step be taken into consideration of said the Germanic Confederation.

We, however, regard at present as decidedly desirable that the Governments of Germany, as members of an assembly of States, shall exchange amongst themselves the convictions with which they are animated in presence of coming dangers, which it is impossible to doubt, and to prepare themselves by a Bundesgesandten to be at a moment's notice in identical language conformable to circumstances, and efficacious either as against Sardinia or as against France, or even as against those two States at the same time. We shall then with a lively interest and warm acknowledgement the assurance that that view of the matter is partaken of by our allies, and that in particular the Government to which you have the honor to be accredited is disposed on its part to co-operate to the effect that a clear understanding may accrue to the benefit of all in the common action with Austria and Germany, the result of which would be to assure success, especially in the selection of the opportune moment and the most convenient means.

You are authorized to consider the present dispatch as a confidential communication. Accept, etc., etc., BUOL.

REPLY OF THE CONFEDERATION TO THE AUSTRIAN CIRCULAR.

The Dresden correspondent of the Courier des Etrangers, who was the first to give authentic extracts from the Austrian circular, now sends the following as the sense of the reply made by the German States:

In the states of Germany German country have seen with satisfaction the confidence which Austria places in their patriotism and in their profound fidelity to the treaties upon which repose the economy of the political organization of States, the peace of Europe and the safety of thrones.

The German States have seen with regret serious differences arise between Austria and France, and have not for an instant disguised from Austria the fatality of the war which Europe would incur should those differences be prolonged.

A war like that which threatens to come on the subject which they call the "Italian question," or the "Italian idea," must, more than any other war, raise uneasiness in the sovereigns and populations of Europe. In such a war many sacred principles are involved and condemned to find their triumph or their humiliation on the battle-field.

The States of the Confederation, very anxious on account of the painful blows to which "Austria, their confederat, seems liable to be exposed, are perfectly mindful of their duty, and nothing has been forgotten, or will be forgotten, that is required by the dignity, the independence and the security of all the countries composing the grand Germanic Union.

But however serious may be the circumstances, it does not appear that there is any imminent or immediate danger of peace being broken; so that, until the situation shows itself in a clearer manner, the German Courts do not think it opportune, in the interests of so many precious interests which are being made to avoid the explosion of war, to adopt a circumstantial explanation on the measures which should be adopted by Germany in the case of hostilities commencing between France and Austria.

The sentiments that Germany and its governments will experience on the day of foreign aggression against one of the members are perfectly well known to Austria. She can therefore rely upon the fact that, in case of need, the Diet of Frankfort, the assembly representative of the wishes, interests and honor of the common country, will know how to protect them, and adopt a line of conduct the most efficacious and most suited to the necessities of the case.

THE CIRCULAR OF PRUSSIA TO THE GERMAN STATES.

If the government of the King, in the present critical state of affairs, has not before explained its views and given instructions to its representatives at the German Courts, it must be attributed to the peculiar nature of the actual political situation.

The peace of Europe appears to be threatened from every point, but it is difficult to say from which. In the East, in Servia, in the Danubian Principalities, there is nothing which cannot be settled by diplomatic measures. The same may be said of Italian affairs.

In the opinion of the government of the King the difficulties of the present situation and the dangers of a conflict are to be sought for not so much in the impossibility of settling private questions as in the counter inclinations (ebenmassen) which have arisen lately between the cabinets of Vienna and Paris.

Under these serious circumstances we did not hesitate for one moment to recognize the duties of our position. Acting upon the wish to manifest the faith of treaties, their bearing upon the present state of things, consequently upon the peace of Europe, we have exerted all our efforts at Paris as well as at Vienna, to point out the incalculable dangers that would result from a conflict, and in both quarters we have made the most pressing appeals for peace and moderation.

However, we did not deceive ourselves as to the conditions on which a line of action might hope to be crowned with success. As it was our intention to act in the sense indicated with all our power upon the two Cabinets at controversy, it was also necessary to maintain an independent position towards both.

As a member of the confederation, we shall never fail in fulfilling our duties towards it as prescribed by its fundamental regulations; but we cannot go beyond that, nor do we think that the present political situation would warrant us in doing so, nor favor the accomplishment of the task imposed upon us, as regards the present state of affairs, as a European Power.

The uncertainty which, so far as can be seen from recent indications, seems to belong to the present situation of affairs, induces us to adhere still more closely to the position we have taken up. If, as now appears probable, negotiations are set on foot concerning Italian affairs, the neutral position which we have so carefully maintained will be of the greatest value in enabling us to give counsel to both sides, and will give weight to our representations.

We have also much satisfaction in the belief that the free position which we have succeeded in obtaining is one which we share with the British Cabinet, and that the efforts we have been working to preserve peace and remove misunderstandings are being also made by that Power. In the co-operation of Russia, too, which we have secured (in dem ich uns erstrebten zusammenwirken mit Russland), we see another guaranty for the successful result of our policy.

Such are, in their essential substance, the points of view which have hitherto acted as our guide, and which, as yet, we resolve to adhere to. By so doing, we believe we are doing good service to the common cause—the cause of peace and the maintenance of the existing state of things—a maintenance which we ourselves desire as well as our German allies. By this line of action we believe that we do better service to that cause than by manifestations and measures which, in our opinion, would either respond to the object in view not to the character of the present state of affairs, but would rather contribute to excite animosity and add fuel to the flames.

I authorize Your Excellency to read this dispatch to the government to which you are accredited. DE SCHLEINITZ.

THE MECKLENBURG CIRCULAR.

The following declaration on the part of thirty-one members of the Legislative Assembly of Wurtemburg has been addressed to the select committee in order to be laid before government:

The whole of Germany is penetrated by one sentiment—that of profound indignation at the attempt that is now made of disturbing the peace of Europe. Nobody, in beholding the enormous armaments now going on in France, is to be deceived respecting the dangers that threaten us, and the fact that these armaments, these warlike demonstrations by assurances of her peaceful intentions; yet the fact of her preparations for war going on increasingly is incompatible with these professions.

On the other hand, nobody is so silly as to believe that these armaments are made in the interests of liberty, or for the cause of oppressed nationalities. The constant object of the founder of the Napoleonic dynasty was the destruction of foreign nationalities—the spreading of unutterable woe and misery in those countries submitted to his intolerable despotism—the founding of vassal States, attributes to be distributed among the members of his own family, regardless of the streams of blood shed in the pursuit of his wicked and ambitious designs. Now, all these things only ceased when Europe combined, and by one common effort hurled the oppressor from his throne.

To attack alternately the various States of Europe, and principally Germany—to hurdle it with intolerable contributions—to destroy its capital of treasure, and make them recite the Catechism, and politely invite their visitors to come in and see how well they can do it. In a month, you will not be any longer annoyed in that way.

Vanhouse on the 21st day of January, 1857, and duly recorded in the Register's office of Shelby county, Tennessee, in book No. 27, pages 404, 405 and 406, I will proceed to sell for cash, at public auction, on Court Square, in the city of Memphis, on the 8TH DAY OF APRIL, 1859, a certain lot of ground lying in the county of Shelby and State of Tennessee, in the city of Memphis, and designated upon a plan of the extension of the northern part of the city of Memphis, through the property of W. R. Vanhouse, as lot No. 1, fronting 24 feet, E. T. Keel, R. F. Looney and others; survey made by W. A.
