Another Duckles Affair—Almost.

The Carroll (Tenn.) Patriot, of the 28th ult., published at Huntingdon, gives the following account of a recent rencounter in that place:

Our usually quiet town was thrown into a high state of excitement on Monday evening last, by a somewhat tragic event which occurred on the corner in front of Rutherford's Hotel.

A rencounter occurred between Mr. R. H. Belcote and Rev. J. N. Linsey, a minister of the Lutheran Church, both residents of this county. The facts of the case, so far as we have learned, are briefly as follows:

Linsey had gone to the hotel with the view of starting home, when he was accosted by Belcote, who requested an interview, which was refused by Linsey. Seeing that a difficulty was likely to ensue, Esquire Rutherford requested the parties to leave the house. As they passed out the door, Belcote struck Linsey with a cane, who returned the blow. Belcote then drew a Colt's repeater and fired. The door, which closed with a spring, momentarily separated the combatants. In a moment, however the conflict was renewed upon the sawdust in front of the house. After a few blows were passed, Belcote fired the second time, the ball taking effect just below the right axilla and lodging under the skin near the spine, inflicting a severe, but it is believed not a mortal wound. After a few more blows the parties were separated, and Linsey was taken to a room in the hotel, where the ball was extracted and the necessary medical attention given.

Belcote was immediately taken in custody by Sheriff Briant, and confined in a room in the same hotel.

On Tuesday morning Belcote was brought before the committing court composed of Esqs. Nesbitt, Pitcox and McDonald. Maj. L. M. Jones appeared as counsel for the prosecution, while T. R. Hawkins, A. Hawkins and V. S. Allen, Esqs., appeared for the defense.

A. Hawkins, for the defense, asked a continuance upon affidavit of the prisoner. The affidavit states that for want of material witnesses he cannot come safely to trial at the present time—that recently during his absence from home, Linsey visited his house and cruelly insulted his wife, and also alleges other acts of libertinism, which he expects to prove when the necessary witnesses can be procured—that under the circumstances he could not have acted otherwise than as he did, without rendering himself unworthy the appellation of husband.

Jones, for the plaintiff, argues the insufficiency of the causes set forth in the affidavit for a continuance—that the testimony proposed to be offered is immaterial to a trial of the case, etc., but proposed that the case shall lie over until evening.

A. Hawkins, for the defense, urged that the testimony which could be procured by a continuance, would be material as affecting the amount of bail required—that the shooting, though justifiable, which he anticipated to establish by reference to decisions in the Sickles-Key tragedy recently enacted in Washington.

T. R. Hawkins, for the defense, argued that under the provocation given, Belcote was justifiable. He objected to having over the case, and urges the motion for continuance.

The Court, upon consideration, determined to continue the case until Friday next, requiring bail to the amount of two thousand dollars for Belcote, with twenty-four hundred dollars for his securities. Twelve gentlemen entered their names upon the bond as securities, whereupon the prisoner was discharged.

During these proceedings the court house was crowded with an eager assemblage of highly interested spectators.

The Murderess Daughter by a Father.

It was stated yesterday that an old man named John Belding had murdered his daughter, at Sand'ske, New York, on Sunday last. It appears the girl, who was about nineteen years of age, had for some time been in ill-health, and that her mind was, in some extent, unsettled. She labored under the impression, it is said, that the devil had possessed her, and used to pray very frequently for deliverance from his grasp. The parties lived in a little house, in which the father earned a livelihood for himself and daughter by following the trade of a shoemaker, but for several weeks he had done nothing but attend upon his sick daughter; and, it is supposed, that in consequence of his care of her, want of sleep, &c., his own mind had become temporarily affected, and while under the delusion that "Dora," as he calls her, was the devil, he killed her. The Troy Times says:

The account which Belding gives of the affair is, that he saw the devil lying on the bed and he struck it in the face. The girl, it appears, was lying down in the back room. Belding followed her from that room to the front room, in which the murder was committed with a shoemaker's hammer. Her skull was completely smashed to pieces. Portions of the brain were scattered about the room, and pieces of the skull were lying over the floor. Her face, too, was considerably bruised and disfigured, and no marks of violence were discovered on the other parts of her body.

Belding says that he thought she was the Devil—that she appeared to him to be four times as large as "Dora" (as he called his daughter) and from his previous and subsequent conduct, there can scarcely be a doubt that the idea of her imagines he had a fight with the Devil, or, as he expresses it, with "three devils." Supposing that it was all he could do to kill them. They lived alone in the house. The first person who discovered the murder was Nicholas Ryerweller, who first saw Belding outside the house. He appeared much excited, and said "Ryerweller that he had "killed the devil, and I was right in there," pointing to his house. R. looked in and discovered the bleeding body of the daughter. He asked the old man if it was not "Dora" that he had killed. Belding replied that he did not think it was. Belding's hands and shirt-sleeves were covered with blood.

The neighbors give both Belding and the daughter a good character. The old man was sober and industrious, and his delusion was the result of some other cause than drink. Dr. Barber believes it to have been caused by his incessant care and attention to his sick daughter.

The Speaking at Springfield.

Correspondence of the Nashville Union:

MESSRS. EDITORS: You have never known the Democracy of Robertson to be in higher glee at the opening of a campaign than they are to be enjoying here to-day. The effort of Gov. Harris was all his friends could have desired. He led off in a speech of an hour and a half in one of the most masterly and powerful efforts to which I ever listened on any occasion. The audience was large and attentive—numbering, I suppose, more than two thousand persons, and during the time he occupied the stand, the entire crowd seemed spell-bound. It was clear, forcible, logical, eloquent and powerful—producing a marked effect upon the countenance of all present. I shall not go into detail; I could not do either speaker or subject justice I have to attempt the task. As a word, I doubt not, a Tennessee audience listened to a political address before of such force, power, and deeply interesting character. Mark the prediction, when I say this sign will be seen at the ballot-box in August.

Poor Netherland! I was sorry for him—he had to follow. He was evidently in bad trim to attempt to follow in reply to such a speech. His mantle had already been taken away—his rigging torn—his hull filled with shot holes, badly leaking, and in a sinking condition, before he was permitted to attempt a return of the fire from the enemy. Reply to Gov. Harris, he did not; nor did he attempt to do so, to a single point the Governor had made. He was too sensible for that; for he saw from the effect will which the speech was received by the crowd, that the speech of Gov. Harris was unanswerable, consequently he did not try to answer it.

The Colonel is a clever gentleman, and tells an anecdote pretty well—only some of them are ill timed, not well assorted and repeated too often—at least once or two every five minutes. But at this we shall not complain; as it would be only bill of fare he seemed to have on hand, suited to the taste and stomach of his friends; and I was truly glad to see them relish and enjoy that, at least. The Colonel is not no good a speaker as he thought—inferior I think, to "our Bob." He tickles the ear and fancy, but makes no solid impression upon the minds even of his own partisans! While, on the contrary, Gov. Harris' address has so imbued and honed his friends, that they could listen to Col. Netherland with the utmost composure, and without the least fear of apprehension of any assault from that quarter, that would endanger their lives, their political faith, or their candidate. We are satisfied—perfectly satisfied—and if Gov. Harris continues throughout the State as he did here in debate to-day with his competitor, he may safely will, in my opinion, be greatly increased over that he received over Hatton in the last election.

Honest farmer, Bob Bartlett, declared himself the Democratic candidate to-day, to represent our county in the Legislature. Let the Opposition take heed and stand from under.

Yours, truly, "OLD ROBERTSON."

Modes of Death.

A recent Quarterly Review contains the following article, which will be read with interest:

To be shot dead is one of the easiest modes of terminating life; rapid as it is, the body has leisure to feel and reflect. On the first attempt by one of the frantic adherents of Spain to assassinate William, Prince of Orange, who took the lead in the revolt of the Netherlands, the ball passed through the hair in the face, and brought him to the ground. In the instant that preceded stupefaction, he was able to form the notion that the ceiling of the room had fallen and crushed him. The cannon shot which plunged into the brain of Charles VII, did not prevent him from seizing his sword by the hilt. The idea to attack and the capacity for defense was present on his by a blow which we would suppose to tremendous to leave an instant for thought. But it by no means follows that the inflicting of fatal wounds is accompanied by a pang. From what is known of the first effect of gun shot wounds, it is probable the impression is rather stunning than acute. Unless death be immediate, pain is varied as the nature of the injuries, and these are past conjecture.

But there is nothing singular in the dying sensation, though Lord Byron remarked the physiological peculiarity that the expression is invariably that of tenacious life; while in death a calm, the countenance reflects the natural character, of gentleness or ferocity to the last gasp.

Some of these cases are of interest, to show with what slight disturbance life may go on when a vital part is struck. "If I cannot go I will go," said the Prince of Orange, "I shall not go in a full stop. A foot soldier at Waterloo, pierced by musket ball in the hip, begged water of a soldier who happened to possess a canteen of beer. The wounded man drank, returned his hearty thanks, mentioned that a bayonet was nearly extermination, and having proceeded a dozen yards on his way to the rear, fell to the earth, and, with one convulsive movement of the limbs, concluded his career. "His voice," said the trooper, who knew it well to the store, "gave scarcely the slightest sound of weakness."

Capt. Basil Hall, who, in his early youth, was present at the battle of Corunna, has singled out, from the conclusion that consigns to oblivion the woes and gallantry of war, one her instance, extremely similar, which occurred on that occasion. An old officer, who was shot in the head, arrived pale and faint, at the temporary hospital, and begged the surgeon to look at his would, which was pronounced mortal.

"Indeed, I learned so," he responded, with lamped d utterance, "and yet I should wish very much to live a little longer, if it were possible."

He laid the sword upon the stone at his side, as gently, says Hall, as if the steel had been turned into glass, and almost immediately sank senseless upon the turf.
