FOR GOVERNOR,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

FOR CONGRESS, TENTH DISTRICT,

WM. T. AVERY

THE BULLETIN AND ITS CHARGES.

The whole article of the Bulletin is based upon the assertion that "the men of the Democratic party, who are now running for office, speak it in their [referring to slaves] hearing, that there is a party in the South ready and willing to affiliate with the Abolitionists of the North, and thus form a combination to strike the chains of slavery from their limbs."—APPEAL.

The APPEAL contracts upon this quotation from the Bulletin of Saturday, a long and somewhat bitter article. The passage is so worded as to justify the construction the APPEAL puts upon it. The article from which it is taken was hurriedly written, and, since our attention has been called to it, we find that it does neither ourselves nor the Democratic candidates justice. The idea we intended to convey was, that the negroes hearing the public discussions upon the subject of slavery in which the Democratic speakers charge the Southern Opposition with affiliating with Abolitionists, form conclusions of their own respecting a combination, etc. That is the idea, and is exactly what we maintain.—Bulletin.

The whole series of sentences commencing with the language, "we charge" etc., in the Bulletin, of last Saturday, are based upon this idea, which the Bulletin now confesses "does neither ourselves [the Bulletin] nor the Democratic candidates justice." We denied the assertion of the Bulletin, and it now says that the idea it intended to convey "was, that the negroes hearing the public discussion upon the subject of slavery in which the Democratic speakers charge the Southern Opposition with affiliating with Abolitionists, form conclusions of their own respecting a combination, etc."

We do not know what conclusions negroes may form respecting the position of the Democracy—it has been usually the habit of disputants to inquire what ought to be the intelligent opinion, or conclusions of educated and well informed white men. We much prefer to confine our inquiries in the latter direction, and leave our cotemporary to push his investigations as may be most agreeable to his judgement and prejudices. We should think, however, that Cuffie has sense enough, before he settles down in his conclusions, regarding the anti-slavery designs of those who oppose the Democracy in the South, to go to them and learn from their own lips whether they really cherish a design favorable to their freedom. If the Opposition will be sure to return the proper answer to all such queries, and soundly punish the querists, we will assure the editor of the Bulletin that he may dismiss his fears, and hereafter cease "to be startled by the midnight rustling of a leaf, and the wail of the night-wind," and no longer "fancy the stealthy tread of a dark and murderous negro in the fluttering of a night bird, and know no time, an hour free from the fear of an assassin."

But if this amended construction of the Bulletin be correct, and it still adheres to its terrible series of charges, we ask what becomes of its heavy accusations of Abolition affiliation against JOHN LETCHER and the Democracy of Virginia—what shall be said about the Bulletin's assertion on the 3d of May, "that the election of LETCHER in Virginia will inspirit the Black-Republicans, and push on the Black-Republican column for 1860—that they claim him as their champion in the North, and declare that his sentiments are in harmony with their own;" and further, that "let him be elected and the SEWARDITES will set up an election ticket in Virginia in 1860, and the South will be exasperated and kept in perpetual agitation?" We desire to ask the Bulletin whether the slaves will "form a conclusion of their own" concerning such charges as these, which have more than hinted, more than Mr. LETCHER, some twenty years ago, favored the emancipation of the slaves of Western Virginia, just as HENRY CLAY and R. C. BRECKINRIDGE did in Kentucky, but has long since publicly abandoned such a theory? If the Bulletin's amended basis of the charges against the Democracy be correct, then all the denunciations and execrations which it has heaped upon GOV. HARRIS and the Democracy, fall with ten fold force upon itself, because it assumes a superior wisdom touching the conclusions of the negroes, and admits distinctly in its last issue that the Democracy "do not know the hazard, they do not comprehend the danger" of discussing a question which is forced upon us by the fanaticism and treachery of the northern Opposition to the present Administration, with whom the southern Opposition are in league, to crush and destroy the only reliable national party in the Union.

THE WAR CRISIS IN EUROPE.

The details brought by the Niagara, of the proceedings in Europe respecting the dispute in which Austria and Sardinia are principals, are of the most profoundly interesting character, proving as they do that war, with all its horrible consequences, is inevitable. In the explanations given by the British minister in Parliament, it was stated that England had made one more proposition, and if that was rejected, then the period was gone by for trifling. This proposition was that the general disarmament, about which so much difficulty existed, should be made; that the period for and extent of the disarmament should be arranged by commissioners chosen for the purpose; and finally, that the proposed peace Congress should not consist merely of the "five great powers," England, France, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, but that the Italian States concerned should also have a voice in settling their own business. This proposition varied widely from the views of Austria, which power had demanded that Sardinia should disarm, while she should preserve her vast war establishment intact. That power, therefore, urged on by her determined bias toward overbearing despotism, encouraged by the speeches of fiery aristocrats and their supporters in the British Parliament, and almost resistlessly impelled by the pressure of her pecuniary needs, refused her consent to the fair and reasonable proposition of England.

The Austrian commander in Lombardy received orders from his government to present to Sardinia, as the ultimatum of Austria, a demand that she should positively disarm. If the latter power refused, war was to be declared in three days, and according to the Vienna correspondent of the London Times, an evasive answer was to be considered equivalent to a refusal. The Niagara sailed before the reply of Sardinia could be received, but the powers interested in the result, knowing that it must be a refusal, proceeded to take measures with a view to that event.

Austria had ordered eighty thousand more troops to proceed to Italy, on the frontiers of the Sardinian territory. The French Government received a dispatch from its general, MARMORA, stating that the Austrians had made a significant movement on the line of Ticino, and he momentarily feared an attack. It was believed in England that a general movement of French forces had been made upon the frontier menaced by Austria, and the English journals were of opinion that the last chance of peace had vanished. The total French force destined to co-operate with Sardinia was estimated at eighty thousand men; it was in two divisions, one of which was under command of the celebrated CANROBERT, the other of L'HUILLIERS; the whole was actively under the command of LOUIS NAPOLEON in person. The Paris correspondent of the London Times states that in France there is no cessation in the feverish preparations for war; masses of troops were concentrating at Lyons, and numerous cavalry regiments were marching to the Rhine frontier. It was also stated that the soldiers on furlough had been ordered in, and the first division of the Army of Paris was to leave that city by railway for Toulon.

In Austria the Southern railway was retained for the exclusive use of the government, and troops and ammunition were in constant transit over it. In Sardinia twenty thousand men, who had come from Rome and other parts of Italy as volunteers to fight the hated Austrians, were impatiently awaiting hostilities. Except in one instance, all the Sardinian steamers on Lake Maggiore had ceased running, and were placed at the disposal of the government. In Rome, it was stated, the Pope had called privately upon the bishops to collect men for two legions of troops; but the service was so unpopular that, even with the offer of a large bounty, the troops could not be raised. In Piedmont, seventy thousand men were ordered to be put upon a war footing, for the purpose of defense; while the Austrian Duke ALBRECHT had concluded a military convention with Prussia, in which that power engaged to send an army of twenty-eight thousand men to the Rhine, under the command of the Prince Regent. This force, if actual war break out, will be increased by sixty thousand men from Bavaria, and sixty thousand from the federal army, besides other contingents. This summary of the operations actually initiated, in addition to the war preparations made by Austria, France and Sardinia beforehand, will give some idea of the magnitude of the struggle that has probably commenced before this. What a subject the spectacle offers for melancholy contemplation to the philosopher, and for devout regret to the Christian!

While preparations were making for "the tented field," cabinets were not idle. On the receipt of the news from Austria, the British ministry held a meeting; LOUIS NAPOLEON held a council with his ministers and the Princes JEROME and NAPOLEON; the King of Sardinia also held a council, and at Frankfort, the Federal Diet, which had been holding secret sittings, resolved to omit the usual adjournment for the Easter holidays.

The funds experienced a shock from the near approach of hostilities—in London Change had officially closed on the 21st, and the Easter holidays followed, still there was a decline of one per cent in consols. In Paris there was great uneasiness, and a perfect panic prevailed, causing a fall of more than three per cent, in two days.

These details give "fearful note of preparation," and there can be no doubt the forthcoming war will be one of a terrible character. It is not like the recent Crimean campaign—in this war personal feeling and fierce passions will be let loose. The oppressed will be armed against his tyrant; the dark and revengeful Italian will stand face to face with the white haired, cool, and stolid Austrian; but blood will flow, and execrations fall from dying lips. The oppressor and the oppressed alike will seek to carry their opposite objects by means of the sword; we can but wish that the right may succeed, and that man's birthright, freedom, may be won by those who have, for many years, suffered in anguish the merciless inflictions of foreign taskmasters.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

EDITORS APPEAL: Dr. Fowlkes, President, has contracted, we learn, with responsible parties, to build fifty miles of this road in twelve months from the dismissal of the State suit by Gov. Reynolds. It is to be a first class road, and fully equipped with locomotives, cars, etc. It is expected daily that this suit will be disposed of.

The payments are to be the sum of $450,000 of the State loan fund, to which the company are entitled under the laws of Texas, and the balance to be paid either in the stock or bonds of the company at par, or lands at $5 per acre, at the choice of the contractors.

The late compromise is, we also learn, fully approved here, and the stockholders aiding the President in freeing the company, by promptly complying with the recommendations of the Louisville and New Orleans conventions. All stockholders who come up to the aid of the company now, as well as those having heretofore done so, will be protected in any and all events. Whereas, those who stand by with folded arms, can be, and doubtless will be, cut off.

The salaries and expenses of the company have been reduced from about $80,000 to about $13,000 per annum, showing that economy and curtailment are the ruling policy. A good feature in the late compromise is the friendly co-operation of the members of the new company with the old company, in carrying out this settlement. All these parties have confidence in the success of the late settlement, and the ability of the old company to pay its debts and build the road.

The cost of the next fifty miles of road just contracted to be built, and the rolling stock, full and entire, is $1,500,000, or $30,000 per mile. The company have amounts, of past work, under this contract, are its stock, State loan, construction bonds, and its lands, from which it will be seen there can be no defeat on its part in its payments.

The contractors are among the most experienced and strongest railroad builders in the United States. This enterprise is now in the high road of successful prosecution. Freed of its debts, its stock reduced to the value of its property, the construction of road rapidly progressing, this company must soon become one of the strongest and best enterprises in the country—offering to capitalists inducements for profitable investment unequaled. Many prudent and discreet calculators believe that with skillful management and integrity the enterprise must soon give the public a highway to the Pacific Ocean, and its stockholders $100,000,000 of wealth for distribution! We do not see a different result with a skillful, economical and honest administration of its affairs in the future. Great zeal and industry characterize its recent management, and continued, superadose results must flow from the work of uniting the two oceans—centraling the commerce of the world—the work of the age.

MEMPHIS REFINEMENT.

WORSHAM HOUSE, MEMPHIS, May 10, '59.

MR. EDITOR: For years past I wander in many lands, I have not renewed my old acquaintance with Memphis, until lately. A backwoodsman now—though once a resident where mechanics meet do congregate—the sound of your sabbath, from the tolling of bells to the singing of praise, have been truly, and I may add honorably, civic. And how refreshing to a heart yearning for the elegant, the noble, and the solemn, to come from the rude worship of forest-life to partake, in your Episcopal Church, of the lofty rendering of its blessed old ritual! No sectarian spirit suggested this remark; it is made as illustrating one of the most marked impressions left on my mind, touching your city's advance in civilization and refinement.

The progress of social culture is also evidenced in the improvement of the Memphis women. The flaring colors, the flaunting airs, the noisy tittering of ten years ago, would shock the sensitive ears of the Memphis beauties of to-day. Education has done its work among them in not only the improvement of their tastes, but in the elevation of their feelings, and in the very carriage and look. The Lady—she who gives all the evidence of a well-bred and well-taught woman—is seen as the queen in the place of pollen resent of Memphis, as in those of Charleston, or in the aristocratic promenade of London. This is striking evidence of your city's progress in true refinement.

But as affecting my personal comfort, old has caused, that I am, nothing impressed me more strongly, as showing the social progress of your city, than the quality of my landlady. Worsham had been an old acquaintance in North Mississippi, and knowing him there, in his private house, as a good fellow and a good host, I committed myself on leaving the steamboat, to a darkey, labeled with the sign and title of the Worsham House. A whole block of buildings, story over story, a whole square of windows, the Worsham seemed, at the time of my arrival, like one of the palaces of the Arabian Nights—a blaze of lights. Apprehending from the outside that the establishment studied merely show and fashion, I found, however, on entering its office, or ante-room, that the internal arrangements gave as much promise as an English hostelry of solid comfort. Keeping pace with everything else, Worsham himself is the very soul of hospitality, the very beau ideal of a landlord; with an enjoyment of the good things of life sharpened by his own kind heart. His clerks—contrasting remarkably with the clerks that twenty years ago were bristling with fight—are highly courteous and attentive; while the waiters are plentifully and well trained that you can hardly wait without being asked if you want anything. At dinner, however, I saw the noble Worsham in all his glory—catching therefrom a full insight into the progress of Memphis in the science of life. Elegant looking ladies, soft, round and ruddy as the apple belowed them, well dressed, well ordered gentlemen, most attentive and well-disciplined servants, made a tout ensemble very much in contrast with the memories of the old hotels of Memphis in years gone by. A bill of fare that might have astrd "Bean Brown," led me to suspect Worsham put on airs; but however, he can obtain them his market said to be as poor—whether he employs cooks educated in New York, Baltimore, St. Louis and New Orleans or not, better meats, better vegetables, fruits, puddings, pies, almonds, nuts, raisins, and confections generally, I never did eat.

The lee of the North, the fruit of the South, the game of the West, the fish of the East, seem to have made the Worsham a kind of perpetual convention. The wines, too, are excellent—his V. Cliquot brand of champagne is equal to any I have sipped at that great resort of English nobility, the world-renowned Mirser's. The improvements in the sleeping accommodation, as compared with that of the former Memphis, is beyond all praise. A bedroom was large, airy, well furnished, and my bedding a perfect feast of fresh and white. The other hotels I know nothing of, but for elegance, fashion and solid comfort, commend me to the luxurious but substantial Worsham.

I should like to dwell at length on the advance of your fair young city. I had in fact intended to have made some remarks on the evidence of that advance as presented in your courts and theaters. Brevity, however, requires me to defer that intention for another visit. Your Sabbath day signs; the evidences of the ladies in your streets; and, above all, the evidence of your magnificent, luxurious and well-ordered hotel, the Worsham, I believe, are to me, who knew Memphis when it wallowed in the mire, wonderful and irresistible proofs of your progress in refinement.

Very respectfully, Mr. Editor,

Yours, etc., OSCEOLO.

THE UNION OF THE DEMOCRACY.—The following resolution, adopted by the Democracy of Montgomery, Alabama, at the instance of Col. Lomax, nominee for a brilliant member of the press, propounds the true policy of the South:

Resolved, That the only general party organization which professes to respect the rights of the South in her property, is the Democratic party; that the overthrow of that time-honored party will insure the triumph of the Black-Republicans, under whose rule it is impossible for the southern people to live, without moral degradation and imminent peril to social order; our duty therefore it is, we believe, the imperative duty of every patriot to labor assiduously for the success of Democratic principles and the carrying out of Democratic principles in the administration of the Federal Government.

MEMPHIS JOCKEY CLUB RACES—SPRING MEETING, 1859.

The first Spring Meeting over the new Memphis Course commenced on Monday, the 2d day of May, and continued during the week. Early in the morning of the first day, a very heavy rain commenced falling, and continued without intermission for several hours, rendering the track heavy, and threatening to disappoint the sports of the day. Toward noon, however, the rain ceased—the sun broke forth brightly, and under the combined influence of wind and sunshine, the track dried rapidly, and, by the time of starting, was in very fair order. The week's sport was continued with uninterrupted good weather until Saturday, when another heavy rain, falling during the second and third heats of the post-stake race, somewhat marred the pleasure of what was, notwithstanding, one of the hardest contested and most exciting races ever witnessed.

The attendance during the week was large—the sport animated, the order perfect; and the meeting, upon the whole, an interesting and highly pleasurable one. The following is a SUMMARY.

FIRST DAY—MONDAY, MAY 2.—Sweepstake for all ages—two mile heats—$200 subscription; $50 forfeit; $200 added by the Club.
