ODD-FELLOWS; OR, ANTI-STAY AT HOME ASSOCIATION.

Illustrated by one who is capable of portraying the Elephant truthfully—having seen it.

BY A LADY OF ST. LOUIS

MONDAY NIGHT. WIFE.

Oh, love, I'm so glad you have come.
The supper's almost cold.
Sweetheart, you look warm, hit for you—
I don't intend to scold.

You, who closed—all business done;
Your heels laid on the mantel—
How pleasant it will be to pass
This evening by ourselves.

HUSBAND.

My love, my dearest love, you know
How happy I should be,
If I could pass an idle hour
In your sweet company.

But (here he sighed) you know we must
Obey some duty's call,
And city—hard, dearer, just this one,
I must be at the Hall.

TUESDAY NIGHT. WIFE.

My love, Mac Comb—(darn, to-night,
Her hair—H. and so,
As sure as I live, I'm almost admire,
I'd really like to go.

HUSBAND.

Tut, shall, my love; (sigh, I forgot,
"The Lodge" is to meet
A special meeting's called to-night;
I wish I could be there

WEDNESDAY. WIFE.

Dear Charles, it's been so dull to-day
Without you, I confess;
Let's draw this table to the fire
And have a game of chess.

HUSBAND.

I would accept your challenge, love,
But, gamed your power never remains,
But Wednesday is our Lodge, you know;
And I must be in hands.

THURSDAY. WIFE.

Well, love, what shall we do-night?
Read, or read the poetry;
Or have a little private talk?
The first for many a day.

HUSBAND.

Just as you please; I'll soon be back;
Business is very great
Importance, love, comes off to-night;
I must not let them wait.

FRIDAY. WIFE.

My love, just step this way for me,
And, Charles, your best my shawl;
You know you promised me to-day,
To take me to the ball

HUSBAND.

I know I did, but really, love,
I had forgot it all,
Anyhow, I wouldn't go to-night
Some members to install.

I hate to disappoint you, dear,
I know it is provoking;
But, then, I'd spoke of it to-day,
I really thought you joking.

SATURDAY. WIFE.

Here, take his baby, Charles, all day
He's late upon my lap—
This evening you can watch him, while
I take a little nap.

HUSBAND.

Poor little thing, how pale he looks;
I hope he won't get worse;
Therefore you should, love, to-night,
Stay I'd stay home and nurse.

SUNDAY. WIFE.

Dear Charles, home is your work and bat,
And ever-where, all worth;
I hope you won't stay late to-night,
There's such a dreadful storm.

HUSBAND.

"Not stay out late?" you don't suppose
I really could intend,
To leave the pleasant circle above,
Her strong home to spend?

Just place my slippers by the fire,
And where this pleasant light
Rights to my easy rocking chair—
We'll stay at home to-night.

A FRENCHMAN'S ACCOUNT OF ROME

M. Edmond About, the well-known writer, was in the Spring of last year sent to Rome by the French Government, to write a series of articles for the Moniteur, but after two or three of them had appeared, the Papal Nuncio protested against their publication, and they were stopped. M. About, however, stayed in the Eternal City, completed his notes, and threw them into a volume, under the title of "The Roman Question." The publication of the book was prohibited in France, but it has been brought out at Brussels, and the Nord has given a number of extracts, among which are the following:

THE KINGDOM OF THE POPE.

The Catholic Church, for which I feel a sincere respect, contains of 129,000,000 of individuals, exclusive of young Mortara.

The Cardinal Bishop of Rome, who is also designated by the appellation of "Vicar of Christ," of "Holy Father," or of "Pope," is invested with unlimited authority over the souls of the 129,000,000 of Co holics.

In mental discipline is highly creditable to the nineteenth century. Posterity will thank us for submitting to it, if it has any sense of justice.

This legal power of the Pope is founded on numerous abuses, and has at all times created malcontents.

It dates from the conservative party—that is to say, the men who have an interest in the maintenance of their government, and the subordinate members of whom it has reduced to a state of passive brutishness—and all the rest are malcontents.

If the complaints of the Moderate party reach the ears of the Pope, and he makes a few observations to his advisers, the Cardinal Minister replies that the edifice is old, and that it would be dangerous to repair it; it would fall to ruins. "After us the deluge," he exclaims; "we have no children. The edifice will last as long as your holiness." And the good intentions of the Pope meet with the fate proverbially assigned to good intentions.

THE PLEBEIANS OF ROME.

The plebeians of the Eternal City are grown up child en, badly brought up, and perverted in different ways by their education. The government which lives in the midst and is afraid of them, treats them as children. They are not required to bear a heavy burden in the way of taxes, they are treated to shows and sights, and occasionally to brief glimpses of circumstances—the receipt for governing as the Emperors of the decline. They are not taught to read, and not the slightest impediment is offered to begging. The rich are sent to their houses to save them the trouble of calling them in. The friar gives i they to the wife, tips as with the husband, instructs the children, and sometimes is it really a father in them.

The plebeians of Rome are sure not to starve. If they have not bread at home they can take a loaf from a baker's basket—the law allows it. All that is required of them is that they shall be good Christians; that they shall protrate themselves before the priests; humble themselves before the great; bow before the wealthy, and abusive from revolution. They are severely punished when they refuse to approach the communion table at Easter, or when they make disrespectful allusions to a saint. The tribunal of the Vicarin understands no joking with such serious matters; but the judges are very tractable on every other point.

The country populi lon, despised by that of the towns, is wretched, ignorant, somewhat factious, but good, tractable, and gets silly bones. At nightfall, whole villages return home from the field. The men are handsome, robus, and seated on their good soldiers. And then half naked men returning home with a hoe on their shoulder, rise in the morning two hours before daylight, sweat a little field, or turn up the soil around their olive trees. They have their little property four miles from the village; they go there with their child and pig. The pig is not fat; the child is ill-dressed; the men look poor; nevertheless they are merry; they gather flowers along the road, and the boy comes home crowned with roses like Lucullus at dinner.

SKETCH OF THE POPE.

Pius IX looks older than he is; his stature is diminutive; he is obese, sallow, and his health is threatening. His paternal and deeply feminine gives an idea of kindness and lassitude; there is nothing imposing about them. Pius IX performs a part in the grand public representations of the Catholic Church with only secondary ability. He believes, he believes who have come a long way to contemplate him at mass, are so rounded to see him take a pinch of snuff while surrounded with the blue vestments of purpose. In his leisure hours he plays billiards, gentle exercise having been recommended him by his physicians. He believes in God. He is not a dolt, a true Christian, but a bigot. In his enthusiasm for the Virgin Mary he has invoted a useless dogma, and raised a tasteless monument that disgrace the Piazza di Spagna. The character of his mind is made up of a compound of devotion, geniality, vanity, weakness and obstinacy, with a dash of peevish rancour which is very reprehensible in him and then. He he stows his blessing with great caution, but only grants a pardon with reluctance. He is a good priest, but an unsatisfactory monarch. I do not believe him to be infallible in temporal matters.

He expresses himself tolerably in French. The failures of his be understanding, and three or four accidents which have happens in his presence, have given rise to a strong prejudice against him among the lower classes at Rome. They imagine that the Vicar of Christ is a jettatore—that he has "the evil eye." When he drives along the Corso, the women plump down on their knees, but with their thumb and index they make the sign supposed to destroy the charm, under cover of the mantilla. It is certain that the Italian question would be greatly simplified if all the clergy were at Rome, and that the hatred of the Mazzi ians is reprehensible in so far as it is personal. I never asked an audience of the Pope; I never kissed his hand, nor his slipper. The only mark of attention he ever condescended to bestow upon me, was some abusive remarks in the Journal de Rome.

Nevertheless, I feel it impossible not to defend him when he is attacked in my presence. If ever any man for two years made the Hero of Europe, he was compelled to evacuate, at the shortest notice, his palace in the Quirinal. Now he talks with his people, with the French, and with himself. The summons of his counsels are not stifled by the remembrance of 1848, which is kept constantly before his eyes, and by the fear of revolution, which is constantly dinned in his ears. He stops his eyes and ears, and prepares to die in peace amongst his trusty supporters and his dissatisfied protectors. He is not so much to blame as weakness and old age, but I confess I should not like to undertake the cause of Cardinal Antonelli.

PREMONITION.—At South Troy N. Y. on Sunday, a lad sixteen years of age, died of croup, having suffered terribly for several days. Two days before his death, he called his father to his bedside, and told him that he was passing to live, for he had a beautiful dream when he was asleep that told him so. He dreamed that he stood upon the shore, he saw God in Heaven, looking sweetly down upon him; that he led down a golden chain, which fell upon the ground at his feet; and that he stooped to look at it, God told him to take hold of the chain and he would draw him up to Heaven, and give him a crown of gold. Sunday the little spirit was set free, and the promise was fulfilled!

MARYLAND SLAVEHOLDERS' CONVENTION.—Do chester county has appointed a large delegation to attend the Slaveholders' Convention to be held in Baltimore on the 9th of June. Several other counties have appointed delegates, and the convention will, no doubt, be largely attended. The object is to devise plans for the better protection and government of the five colored people in the of the State.

Wine Without Grapes.

At the northwestern corner of the Mediterranean, where the blue waves of the Gulf of Lyons beat upon the smiling shore of Languedoc, stands the smiling and prosperous little town of Cette. Its harbor is convenient, and usually crowded with shipping, displaying the flags of many nations. A stranger is often at first sight puzzled to determine what may be the particular branch of trade to which the inhabitants are indebted for their wealth. The warehouses are numerous, the stores are commodious; there are no beggars, and there is no appearance in any part of indulgence or idleness. Among the craftsmen, perhaps a preponderance of coopers is observed; vas, indeed, is the consumption of stives and hoops. Logwood brre is also used largely, elder extensively, sucar not a little; Cheroqs and Brasiletto are imported in great quantities, but never leave Cette under the original names. To be brief, within the limits of this little Mediterranean seaport, and from the crude materials above enumerated, are produced in enormous quantities imitations of every known vintage; Claret, Hochheimer, Johannisberg, Burgundy, Champagne, Moselle, (Sparkling or still,) Madeira, Lacrymae, Christi, Constantia, humble Port, or Imperial Tokay. Travellers not how rare nor how choice the original sample may be, so accurate is the palate, so nice the skill of this little colony of thirty wine merchants, that they can, with more than Chinese precision, imitate the flavor and copy the color of the required fluid; nay, even the very form of the bottle in which the genuine wine is ordinarily met with; so that an experienced judge is not unfrequently imposed upon. A bad vintage, or even a succession of bad seasons, is regarded there more as a blessing than a misfortune. The price of wine naturally rises, but the cost of ingredients used by the manufacturer of Cette remaining pretty much the same, he is enabled to supply his customers with increased advantage to himself. Little, therefore, does he pray for an abundance of grapes or a genial September sun. Let but the elder crop be copious, and the Bay of Campeche yield liberally its useful stores, and he will take care the cellars of England shall not want replenishing with the finest Port.

It is said that, some time since, this industrious city was reduced to the greatest straits by the wreck of a long-expected vessel with heavy consignments of bois de Brasil. But for a happy thought, there would probably have been a fearful advance in the price of Port wine. Lucky, however, the best, that summer, had been unusually prolific, and madder was abundable at easy rates. The loss of the ill-fated ship was erased to be benefitted, the honor of Cette was saved, and her profits even exceeded the average of former years.

PERSEVERANCE.—An hour before the North Carolina took fire, Mrs. Clayton, one of the passengers, became suddenly impressed with the belief that some impending calamity was at hand, and forthwith arose, dressed herself and prepared for it. It is a single fact, that some persons are thus forewarned of danger; and also with regard to other matters the result, good or bad, of a certain course of conduct is performance of some way. There are persons who have these premonitions of the unknown events of the future, and they often have good causes to regret a failure to yield to the real impulse, though mysterious influence.—Norfolk Argus.
