Daily Appeal.

THERE'S BUT ONE PAIR OF STOCKINGS TO MEND TO-NIGHT.

An old wife sat by her bright dresses,
Sewing thoughtfully to and fro,
Its ten minutes gone since she laid down her work
Told a tale of long ago;
While down by her alcove, the kitchen floor,
Stood a basket of worsted balls—a store,

The good man dozed after the latest news,
Till the light of his pipe went out;
And unheeded, the kittens with frolicking paws,
Rolled and tangled the balls about;
Yet still sat the wife in the ancient chair,
Swaying to and fro in the firelight glare.

But soon, a noisy tear-drop came
Down over a faded face,
That trembled down to a furrow deep,
Like a single drop of rain;
Its deep was the shadow—so silent the stream,
The good man saw naught but the dimmed eyeleam.

Yet unrevealed to none that the cheerful light
Of her eye, had vanished quite;
And narrowed, her mate at the tangled balls—
As he smiled upon them—
"I have shared the joys since our marriage eve,
Comes her share in the sorrows now?"

Then she spoke of the time when the basket rose,
Was filled to the very brim,
And now there remained of the goodly pile
But a slender palm-full left;
Then wonder not at the dimmed eye-light:
There's but one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

I cannot but think of the hour fled,
Whose twilights were wont to be!
To the blessed, sunshine we enjoyed in time—
Now vanished as far away!
How the sprightly steps to a mother dear
Trembled, fell on the carpeted floor.

For each empty sock in the basket stil,
(By "hearth there's no empty seat)
And I take the shadows from off the wall,
And the gather of many feet;
For for this there is ever another to fill
At the one pair of stockings to mend to-night.

Yearnest that for thread the thread wile
And over the motherly heart
Was a land whose rivers and darkening caves,
Were peopled with the fairest souls;
They are Bird-lock turned from the naked days,
And I know the stockings were only fair

Another went forth on the teaming wave
And furnished the basket's store—
But his feet grew cold—to weary and cold—
They'd never be warm any more;
And this sock in its emptiness, seemeth to me,
To give force to more than the mean of the sea.

The others have gone towards the setting sun,
And made them a home in its light;
And fairer dreams have taken their share,
To mend in the fireside night;
Some other beings their garments fill—
Remember, O! remember!

Another—the dearest—the fairest—the boy—
Was to only the angels aware,
And left in a garment this morning worth not sold,
In a land of continual day;
O! wonder not then at the dimmed eye little,
While I mend the one pair of stockings to-night.

Captain Bossier.

The New Orleans Delta, April 21, has the following sketch of the adventurous life of Capt. Bossier, who was fatally wounded in a rencontre with Mr. Vernon, as we told the tale yesterday:

We are pleased to learn that Captain Bossier is doing well this morning, having passed the night without fever, and that his wounds, though severe, are not such as to prove, as he fears, to be of a dangerous character. This is not the first time that this gentleman has been seriously wounded. Few men have ever passed through the many perils—have suffered so many wounds and have led such an adventurous life. He was badly wounded at the battle of Navarino, in 1828, where he commanded a vessel in the European service, and when his ship had been blown up by one superior force of the British squadron, he was found among the other wounded, in the rock-pit, and made himself known to the British officers, who, by a strange coincidence, proved to be our late fellow-citizen, John Geddes Eag. Great was Geddes astonishment to find, dressed in the uniform of the Egyptian, a young man who spoke English so glibly. On inquiry, he found he was a Baltimore boy, who, in a spirit of adventure, had accepted a commission in the Egyptian navy, and had the misfortune to be attached to the Turkish squadron in the perfidious slaughter at Navarino, where England and France played so vile a part for the benefit of Russia.

Young Bossier was held as a prisoner some time by the British, and well treated. On his return to this country, he embarked in some naval enterprises in the gulf—was engaged in the attack on Porto Bello, where his ship was again blown up, and he badly wounded. But we cannot pretend, in the compass of this sketch, to relate all the singular adventures and hair-breadth escapes which this gentleman has passed through. His last misfortune—that is, the last before the affray of yesterday—was a very singular affair. While engaged in a wrecking or salvage expedition in the Gulf of Mexico, off the mouth of the Mississippi, Bossier hailed a large ship, bound for this port, with a view of going aboard to get some fresh eggs and have a friendly chat with the captain and passengers.

It appears, however, that the ship captain, crew and passengers had been greatly alarmed, by reports of pirates in the Gulf, and their imagination had conjured up various circumstances and movements of Bossier's little vessel into evidences of piratical designs. Accordingly, when the unsuspecting gentleman came aboard the ship, he was surprised to find all the crew and passengers standing at the companion-way, with various weapons in their hands. He could not, however, imagine that their intentions were hostile, and stepped on the deck. This was the signal for the general assault upon a single unarmed man. He was set upon by the whole crew and all the passengers with smalling spikes, billets of wood, and every other available object, and was terribly beaten, several of his bones broken, and left senseless and bleeding on the deck. Finally, however, some of the passengers, moved by pity, took charge of his more badly bruised and removed below, his wounds dressed, and by the best care and attention, especially of some ladies, his life was miraculously saved, and he was brought to this city.

He recovered, instituted suit in the United States Court for large damages against the owners of the ship, by whom he claims to have been so cruelly treated, and recovered all that he claimed.

Nor did he omit to inflict personal chastisement upon the assailants. Since this occurrence, and until the unhappy affair of yesterday, Captain Bossier has led a peaceful life ashore, residing in the parish of St. Tammany. We hope he may yet live to see his hopeless and live many years, enjoying the quiet peace and happiness of rural life with relish, made keener by the recollection of his many singular adventures, his frequent sufferings and disasters, and wonderful escapes.

Southern Pacific Railroad.

The compromise made by Dr. Fowlkes, President of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, has sent a thrill of joy throughout the Union. Three thousand stockholders, scattered throughout thirty-three States and half a dozen territories, owe a debt of gratitude to President Fowlkes, for his zealous, indefatigable, persevering and successful efforts in behalf of their interests. The road is saved, and former enemies are now friends, acting harmoniously in forwarding a great enterprise. The whole amount of value, now in the hands of stockholders, which the company has issued, is about $2,500,000. The real value of the same to the company, after paying off every dollar of liabilities, is $1,250,000. The franchises of the company are worth millions more than the most sanguine friends assess them at.

The company have determined to reduce the outstanding stock to one-half, and stop all interest on stock till one hundred miles of the road are completed. The profits of the road will pay the interest. By this arrangement, there will be no more fancy stock in the market. There will be only 100 shares of stock, which represent one hundred dollars, will hold 50 shares, actually worth $100. As the stock, poor stock, 100 shares at $5 per share, is worth $50. Under the new arrangement, inside stock for the real value of all the assets, 50 shares at $100 per share will be worth $5000—some difference, the stockholders will perceive, in their favor. Fancy would teach us, if we held 100 shares, representing a hundred dollars per share, that we held $10,000, which cost only $500!—i.e. $50 per share. Facts teach us that if we hold 50 shares, worth actually in the assets of the company $100 per share, that we hold $5000. Our explaining is correct, and we are glad that all fancy stock will now be driven out of market, and the stock will accordingly take its permanent place on the stock boards of our country, with a real instead of a nominal value.

The whole amount of debts against the company is $250,000. Half of this is already paid, and provision is made to pay about $100,000 in stock of the company.

Never, since our attention was turned to this company, has this wonderful, gigantic and noble enterprise seemed more bright and prosperous than at this very time. We have heretofore had doubts—some, fears—warm confidence, and we predict that capitalists will soon take hold and retire all floating stock from the market.

We speak reason to expect Dr. Fowlkes in Louisville very soon. When he comes, he will receive a hearty welcome from the citizens, stockholders of Old Kentucky. He has done noble in behalf of the interests of the stockholders, and let him have all the credit. None but him could, in our opinion, have done so well, and the Southern Pacific Railroad is indebted to him for its present flattering prospects.—Louisville Courier.

The Waltz.

Byron wrote a stinging satire on the waltz and on waltzing, but still the waltz has survived his fulminations. Other satirists, moralists, humorists, caricaturists, have tried their hands at the effort to put down this style of dancing but in vain. The waltz, the mazurka, the redowa, the polka, the varsovienne, the Sicilienne, the coronelienne, all in one game, still flourish and prevail, despite all the carpers.

One of the best hits of waltzing we have seen, is this, which lately appeared in the columns of the St. Louis Democrat:

"Look look," said half a dozen ladyvoices one pretty girl, as we walked around the outside of the ball-room. We did look—alas! for our modesty ought not to have done so. "If my children were home then I'd whip them well for it! Yes, if they were full grown, I'd give them the hickory!" So said the wife of one of our princes, as she turned away in offended dignity. Let us describe a little—if the public may look, certainly it may read, though it run. A group of splendid ones are on the floor, and "nightly acted." The gents encircle their partners' waists with one arm; the ladies and gentlemen stand close, face to face. The gents are very erect, and lean a little back; ruddy, too. The men look forward. (Music.) Now all wheel, whirl, circle and curl. Feet and heels of gents go rip-rap tippy, tippy, tippy, tippy, tippy, tippy-tip. Then all go ripplety, ripplety, ripplety, tippity, tippity, tippity, ripplety, tippity, jumpity, bumpity, thump. Ladies fly off by centrifugal force, and gents go pull ladies hard and close. They reel, swing, slide, slide, look tender, look silly, look dizzy—feet fly, hoops fly, dresses fly, all fly. It looks tuggity, pullity, squeezity, rubity, rip. The men look like a cross between steel-yards and limber jacks, beetles, &c. The maidens look down their chins very low, or raise them exceedingly high. Some smile, some grin, some giggle, some pout, some sneer, and all sweat freely. The ladies' faces are brought against those of the men, or into their bosoms, breast against breast, nose against nose, and toes against toes. Now they go in again, making a sound like gourgity, gorgity, derry, yerry, riley, piley, cowchey, poochey. This dance is not much, but the extras are glorious. If men were women, there would be no such dancing. But they are only men, and the thing goes on by women's love of it. A secular writer says: "There is no established standard of propriety about this matter. If I were a lady, I might object to these dances, but being a man, I do not. We certainly ought to be satisfied if they are."

A Certain Lecture on the Sons of Malta.

Mrs. Tomkins having been abed half an hour, determines to keep wide awake and wait patiently for her lesser half, who has gone to attend the initiation of a brother. In due time Tomkins comes home, and creeps quietly into bed. Just as he is about quietly snoring off, Mrs. Tomkins commence:—"Sons of Malta, indeed! A pretty institution. I'd like to know what it means! What do you say, "the rough and rugged road?" I guess I've travelled that pretty well, with you coming home at this hour of the night. 'Condition!' oh, of course you must be in good condition. Every Son of Malta is, I believe, but I'd like to know how long they will remain so. What when they've resigned the office of G. R. I. A. X. U. P.? Oh, of course, of course: any man who holds an office with such a lot of initials can't help but be in bad condition. Don't talk to me.

What does it all mean? that's what I'd like to know. 'Swim?' No, sir, I can't swim. I suppose you can though. You've got along swimmingly with me, because I'm such a fool; but it won't last long, sir, no, sir. You can swim as much as you please, but you shan't swim with me any longer. Keep your hands off, and don't laugh at me. You shall not set me on a 'gridiron.' I won't turn round, and I shall please myself whether I go to sleep or not. I'd like to know what woman could expect to ride with ease and safety with you. Why, you've had at least a pail-full of lager beer. Be off, and don't touch me. I will have nothing to do with you or your 'solemn conclave.' I have not 'departed,' nor do I intend to depart. 'Fit your life, if it's only to plague you. Do you hear what I say, Tomkins?'

Keep your hands to yourself; I'll have nothing to do with you. "Expedition?" you're smart now, that you're so if such a set of fellows as the Sons of Malta could ever join an expedition. Fiddle on your regalia. What do you suppose I care for that? Dazzle my eyes, would I? I don't know that. After looking on such a dazzling figure as you are, it must certainly appear a very brilliant spectacle. What do you mean by that, sir? If I only lifted my apron up I could hold more than you, I've no doubt; but I don't know what you mean, sir. No, Mr. Tomkins, and I don't want to know, either. Go to sleep, sir, and let that be 'recorded.'"

Congress Water.
MUCH spurious Mineral Water is imposed on the public as "CONGRESS WATER" by unprincipled grocers or counter-feiters, who when they dare not use that name, call it "Saratoga" Water; which many persons suppose to be the real title of the Congress Water, although it is only the name of the town where the Springs are.
To protect the public from such impositions, we have all kegs branded thus
Any one buying Congress Water, may be certain of its genuine character, when they find the brand on the cork, and the capsule, as above.
Orders will receive prompt attention if addressed to us, at Congress Spring, Saratoga, N. Y., or at our Depot, corner of Duane and Hudson streets, in New York City.
