HOPE

For the Memphis Appeal.

Sweet chorus of the weary heart,
Spread thy gay sunlight over my way,
And bid each gloomy thought depart
Before the brightness of the ray

The past, with all its weight of woe,
Like a dim spectre hastens on,
Where the dark shadows come and go,
And shroud—lends poor their brightest words.

The mystic future darkly lies
In clouds and mists, where murky gloom
Shrouds, like a pall, its hidden skies,
Drear as the bondage of the tomb

I stand in doubt and trembling dread,
With chaste trust and shrinking fear,
And beckon the path to tread
That leadeth on life's journey here.

O, Hope, I would thine aid invoke,
Till my imprisoned thoughts are free,
And the dark spell of gloom is broke,
Which enchantedly cast's her me.

Come, with the beaming on thy wings,
And images of joy and love—
Sweet as the song an angel sings
To the fair climes of bliss above

And I will look with hopeful trust
To the dim future yet to come,
Till I shadowing my weary dust,
And soar to my eternal home

CONFESSIONS OF AN ARKANSAS LAWYER.

BY A. M. S.

For the Memphis Appeal.

It was Christmas morning, and I had resolved to pass the day in the society of friends, laying aside all thoughts of legal study, and as far as possible, all dull cases. But I was doomed to be disappointed.

Scarcely had I finished my morning report, when a messenger rode up to my gate, inquiring for me. He informed me that a man named Lamberry, Major Simms' overseer, had whipped his wife almost to death, and was now under arrest. His trial was to come on that very day, before an examining court, and he had sent for me to defend him. The distance was about six miles, and the weather was bitterly cold. I was further informed, that there was a great excitement about the whipping. It was thought that the woman would die, and hence, a number of women from the neighborhood was in attendance upon her. The trial was to be at Lamberry's residence.

I was forced to give up the social enjoyments of the day, together with the Christmas dinner, that I knew was in course of preparation, and accompany the messenger away to Lamberry's. I did not much like to go. Lamberry was said to be a great scamp. Any man must be that will whip his wife. As it was a holiday, I thought it quite likely that the whole population would repair to the scene of action, to hear the trial. The ladies would be there to visit the poor creature that had been so unmercifully beaten by the hand that ought to have protected her! I was a widower at that date, and had just made up my mind to lay my heart, and hopes, and humble fortune, at the feet of a certain young lady not a league distant. "Now, said I to myself, "if I plead for Lamberry, the women in this region will all regard me as being in favor of a man's whipping his wife. 'My prospects will be blighted." Besides all this, I really had such a horror for the unmanly act, that I did not like to defend it. However, I went.

Sure enough, the human hive in those parts, had swarmed and settled at Lamberry's, just as if the poor abused woman had been the queen-bee. There were another two rooms to the log cabin, in one of which lay the woman on a miserable bed. It was crowded with women, among whom I caught the glance of my Delilah's mother. The other room and the yard were filled with men, some guarding Lamberry, and others waiting to hear the trial. The cold being intense, a large heap of logs was burning in the yard.

Delilah's mother, finding that I was there, managed to get to speak with me, and begged me not to plead for the graceless wretch.

I desired an interview with the prisoner alone. The sheriff would not permit us to walk off by ourselves, but shut us up in the room—all others, the meanwhile, retiring. I frankly told Lamberry, that his was a sad case; that if his wife died he would certainly be hanged; and whether she lived or died, he would have to go—to the penitentiary. I advised him to make no defense. He did not concur with me. His wife, he said, would not die. He had whipped her before, and she had acted precisely as she was now doing. He insisted that I could "quibble" him out of the scrape, and offered to give a young horse he had, worth one hundred dollars, as my fee. With great reluctance I agreed to take the fee, and the horse was brought out and delivered to me. I tied him to a limb of a small tree that stood near the gate.

I now set my thinking cell to going, to devise some plan to get my client free, and to escape blame myself. The most feasible was, gravely upon Lamberry to make his escape. I had another private interview with the prisoner, and told him that his only chance was to run. "They'll shoot me," said he. I told him that I would go to their guns, as they all stood leaning against the house, and examine them one by one, and manage to take the cape off. I planned to get up a jumping match in the yard, in which a number joined, including the prisoner. I handled the guns as agreed upon, and took every cap off, and proposed jumping against the whole crowd, to pass away the time until the counsel for the prosecution should arrive.

Quite a match of jumpers was made up. Lamberry was an active man, and jumped well. Three consecutive jumps were first practiced—then four, then five. I had told my client that I would watch for a chance, and give him the wink; that he must jump five times, and then leap the fence and dash into the thicket hard by, and run for life. I had other reasons for adopting this course. First, I wished the people the cities; second, I wished to avoid making any defense; third, I wished to own the young horse that I had just received as a fee.

The jumping went on bravely. I jumped, the justice jumped, the deputy sheriff jumped, Major Simms jumped—but Lamberry was the best jumper. His fifth jump brought him near the fence. I had him to jump several times, until the guard became careless. Then I gave the wink. He jumped, one, two, three, four, five! over the fence he sprang, and way he went—OX MY HORSE! All pursuit was vain. The prisoner made good his escape, and I made the fee.

The Progress of the Great Eastern Steamship.

This leviathan steamer having now definitely passed into the hands of the Great Ship Company, active steps are taken in order to have the vessel ready for sea by the latter end of July, or the beginning of August. Several hundred workmen are engaged in the work, and the progress is rapid. The great shaft, weighing upwards of thirty tons, was some time since placed on board. Since that time the fitting of the machinery has progressed rapidly, and one of the main masts will be set up in the course of a few days. The mast is now lying alongside the ship, and the sheers are prepared for hoisting it into its place. There will be six masts to the ship, three of iron and three of wood. Those in the neighborhood of the funnels will be of iron, the foremast of wood, and the aftermost of iron. The necessity of having iron masts will be readily understood, when it is remembered that the funnels, burning some 200 tons of coal per day, will send enormous heat through the massive funnels. It happens at times that it is necessary to cut away the masts, and when they are of timber there is an obvious mode of accomplishing this object. Masts of iron, do not, however, afford the same facilities, but this difficulty is to be overcome by a screw of immense power, which, placed on the deck and attached to the masts, will, when set in motion, crush in the iron sides, and let the towering iron columns fall overboard. A very ingenious arrangement for fastening the rigging to the masts is to be adopted, which, in the event of its being necessary to send the masts overboard, will afford facilities for immediately letting go all the ropes. The shrouds and stays will be secured to iron rings so constructed as readily to open when required, but on ordinary occasions holding with a firmness which defies any amount of strain which might be brought to bear upon them. The whole of the rigging will be of wire. The main and the aftermost yards of the spare rigged masts will be of iron, and the length of the main yard 120 feet, or very nearly feet longer, and several times as strong as the main yard of any three-deck battle ship afloat. It has been finally decided that Portland, in the State of Maine, shall be the port to which the Great Eastern will make its first voyage.—Liverpool Post.

The Bride of a Week Returns after a Twelve Years' Absence.

We have been requested to suppress the names in the following curious history, which has recently transpired, rather than the last chapter of which recently occurred in this country. A worthy son, some twelve years ago, married a neighboring lady, daughter of a very respectable family. They removed immediately to a distant place, where they had been living but a few days, when he returned home one evening, the wife of a week was missing. She did not return that night, during which he felt, of course, the utmost anxiety, and in the morning he went in search of her. He could only learn that she had taken the stage alone, which led to a railroad station, some miles distant. He followed, but at the depot lost all traces of her. He wrote to her former home, and published notices in the newspapers, but could obtain no clue to her whereabouts. He grieved in loneliness at her supposed criminal act, and to escape the scene where his week of unmilled happiness had been followed by so great a grief, he removed to this then sparsely settled wilderness. He here settled upon a promising piece of land, and in its cultivation and the cares of life, sought forgetfulness of the past. He succeeded measurably—has filled offices of trust, and grown wealthy. After a few years, his home requiring attention, he married, but his wife lived only long enough to bear him a son, and witness the first year of the little one's existence.

A few weeks since, as the well-to-do man of the world was sitting by his fireside, there entered a woman well clad, of fuller form and twelve years older, but the picture of the long-lost bride of a week, and she was accompanied by a girl of near a dozen years.

The sober man of forty was startled, but asked the stranger visitor to be seated. Then came her long and agonizing story. All was oblivious to her for the first ten years of their separation. She could tell nothing, except of one hour of returned reason, when the little girl beside her, his daughter, was brought into the world. After that long time, fitfully, and at periods remote from each other, came back reason and memory. She had wandered to a distant city, in a state of wild insanity; there she fell among kind people, and was installed in an insane asylum. After the birth of the daughter, and ten years more spent within its walls, thoughts of her youth, her home and her husband, came back. She slowly recovered; then visited her parents, learning where her husband was, and flew to him. Be sure he clasped her in his arms, and they wept upon each other's neck. Again going before the altar, they were united, and she now presides with careful dignity and ease over his household.

But little is said of it in the neighborhood, except the expression of wonder at "Squire D.'s sudden and unexpected marriage to one whom they supposed to be a fair widow with whom he had recently become acquainted.—Madison Press, April 16.

Notice to Cotton Growers.

A Valuable Tract of Cotton Lands for Sale containing 1400 Acres.

HAVE for sale a tract of land, containing fourteen hundred acres, situated on the Mississippi River, twenty miles below Vicksburg. Three miles of river frontage and, in portions three, four, five and seven miles back. This land is in a good state of cultivation, the back of St. Francis river, four miles below Eudora, and has upon it about ten thousand dollars worth of improvements, such as houses and fencing, and a good gin house and gin. Upon this tract of land there are eighty acres in cotton, one hundred and eighty acres well ploughed and prepared for cotton, and eighty acres well ploughed and prepared for corn and potatoes, and twenty acres in potatoes. The tract is unencumbered in point of title, and I will give a good and sufficient title to purchaser. For terms of sale, apply to O. R. Caldwell, near the premises, or to Wm. Fox, Esq., of Memphis, or to Jas. A. Rosser, of Helena, or to mr. of Louisville, Kentucky.

PLANTATION AND NEGROES FOR SALE.

I OFFER for sale the place on which I now reside, which is known as the Hernando Plantation, situated on Lake Commerce, Defiance county, Mo., three miles from Hernando, and two miles from Commerce, Mississippi, and twenty miles from Memphis. It consists of one section of land, containing 640 acres, 150 of which are in cultivation, the balance well timbered, and is a good stock farm. The place has on it a good dwelling house, with all necessary out houses, and is well watered. The place is one of the best in the county, and is in a healthy neighborhood. Any one desiring to purchase a good home, will do well to call and see for themselves. The place has on it the following, and will be sold with the plantation, viz: 1 pair of mules, good work mules, 1 horse, 1 good milch cow, 1 fine young bull, 1 two-horse wagon, 1 two-horse plow, 1 double set of harness, and all the farming utensils, and a quantity of corn and fodder. The place has on it the following negroes, viz: Jim, a prime hand at farming, Dolly, a good cook, washer and ironer, Ellen, a good house servant, and Charlotte, a girl of 12 years of age. The above negroes will be sold with the place, if desired. For further information, call on my office in Fulton Block, corner of Main and Monroe streets.
