The Ladies of Cadiz.

The elder Brooks—J. B., writes to the New York Express:

The Cadiz woman is a living, thinking reality. She walks the streets of Cadiz as Virgil's goddesses were walked by the Mantua bard. Her plump, short, pretty foot really twinkles, as, in dark satin shoes and lace stockings, it glides over the earth. No veil covers her eyes head or hair, in fact or heart—no veil, unless it be the shadow of her black redundant hair, that seems to grow to the head, so nicely coiffured is it that ever (the whole time it not) while the sculptors mantle in it. Her hand, too, is as perfect as her foot and head—and through out she is, as the French phrases have it Bien gaunte, bien chausse, bien habille—one fear for rappers. Then her lace veil, or mantilla, thrown over her shoulders, or pined to the back of her head, the air, the manner, the grace, the whole demeanor, makes her, in my eye, the best dressed, the finest show off woman that I have ever, in any country, seen in the street. Paris, the bold quintessence of fashion and elegance—certainly turns out no such belles. New and to this a fan, ever in motion, and that does duty more inanimate matter. I supposed I could never be made to do—a fan that adorns the bonnet, the parasol, and the veil beside—a fan that telegraphs, and signalizes, that chatters, and eyes flirts—a fan that talks, sings, and Flatt sometimes more than tongue, think I say, of what perils a man is in fresh from Egypt and Moslem land, who has not before been permitted to see a live woman for another life.

The streets of Cadiz, when the sun is declining, begin to be full of such goddesses, on foot, for carriages are a rarity in Cadiz, and the whole fashionable is on her nice, clean streets, her squares, and Alameda, or public walk. There the Cadiz lady, after hours, perhaps, spent upon her head and hair, goes to be admired, as well as to be seen—hours, I say, for the toilette here is a full, a task indeed. That redundant head of hair that the winds disturb not, that not even the gale, perhaps, could shake in a single lock, is not all of nature, always, or if all natural, is not thus by nature immeasurably fixed. If the mysteries of the Cadiz toilette had not been developed to me by lady tongue, I could guess it, nay read it, in the coiffure shops all about. Those great creams there in the windows, what are they for? For sale, of course. Those puffs, puffs, puffs, what mean they?—for they are not things of air. Those brilliantines, those preparations of German wool! Ah, now I read the very windows of the Cadiz shops, what mean heads of hair, so abundant, so abundant. I never believed my own sex women the like! But what thus keeps "heads" thus composed so perfect in their place, despite the air, the trade, rough winds even, that Cadiz then not? A pomade has the power, no caster oil, with which our ladies (hateseo reference!) sometimes besmear her hair. Not at eggs—albumen—albumen is used, sometimes glue or glycerine, but oftener a decoction of linseed boiled well, to starch and stiffen, so that the hair is not only fixed, but glazed! O woman, woman, there's a charming cheat!

The street turn-out of a Cadiz lady, you see then is complete, perfect, and, if it were to be bought, and has no bewitcher ribbons upon it, nor flowers, nor lace. To do up the head, thus is a daily rent, and in the end, therefore, costs more than the Broadway bonnet. But the other turn-out of the Cadiz lady is just as the head. Her veil is of Sevilla or Barcelona lace, and costs from $75 to $110. Her mantillas, too, is of lace, or rather of embroidery, the work of Seville, and the rent may vary from $30 to $100 and more. The pins that connect her veil with her hair, must be precious, and therefore dear. Her shoe is always of black, and that of the finest and costliest black silk. Her stives and gloves are the most redoubt that the artists of Cadiz can produce. Her waist, her air, her fan, it may be of any price. This, now, is fashion in the jumping-off place of Spain—"the end of the world."

The Price of Books in England and America.

Dr. Shelton McKenzie, the assistant editor of the Philadelphia Press, mentions that a new American work, which is published and sold in this country at one dollar, is republished and sold in England at two dollars and a half. The Dr. says:

There is no reason why it should not have been sold in London at half dollar, the retail price there. The duty on new American books imported into England is three cents per pound. "The Convalescent" (the volume in question) is only twenty ounces, which would make the import duty on each single volume about four cents. English publishers allow the trade 25 per cent. profit, while the American publishers usually give Low & Son, of London, about thirty per cent. The five per cent. difference would fully pay for the freight and duty. Sawtey Smith, Sampson, Low & Son generally the same profit as if they sold an English book. As Americans in England who desires to buy this new book, and knows that its retail price is a dollar, must be thunderstruck in Messrs. Low's bookstore, in London, on being charged two dollars and a half for it. This it is which makes the sale of American book comparatively small in England. This encourages piracy, to the injury of the American author, by checking the sale of the American printed books, in which he has an interest. Cheat not our authors and publishers look to it!

By way of contrast, we draw attention to two other books. The Harpers, of New York, have just published a new domestic novel by Charles Reade, author of "White Lies." Never too late to mend," and other extremely popular works of fiction. The new book is called "Love me little, Love me long," and is one of the best, because most natural, stories we have read for years. We place it alongside of "Adam Bede," and our very excellent friend "Doctor Thorne." This book has not yet been published in England—at least, not a foot-light edition, in which he has an interest. Cheat not our authors and publishers look to it!

A Southern Palace.

In passing the Show Window of Mr. L. Schwartz, bookseller, on Chalmers street, yesterday, we were attracted by the design of a most superb residence, to be erected for Col. J. A. S. Acklen, on his plantation up the river, opposite Red river landing. It is a magnificent piece of art, so willing to spend a large part of his great revenues in the permanent embellishment of his southern estate. We consider him a benefactor, and we trust that his example will be speedily imitated, until Southern homes become as noted for palatial elegance as their prototypes have long been for generosity of character and a hospitality which has no parallel for heartiness and profusion.—N. O. Crescent.

Napoleon's Camp Tent.

From Correspondence of the New York Times.

The camp tent of the Emperor Napoleon, which preceded him to Italy, was made by Alexander, of Paris, and is a little more than a tent cloth, doubled. Its hight is about fifteen feet. The interior is divided into three compartments—a saloon, bed-room, and dressing-room. Doors in the cloth permit a passage from one room to the other, and windows are pierced for ventilation. An iron bed, folding seats, and three small tables—one for the toilet—compose the furniture of the Imperial residence. The tent is remarkable for its perfect finish, the facility with which it can be put up and taken down, and the general adaptation to the purpose for which it was destined. It was made five years ago, for the war in the Crimea, and stationed on the journey as far as Marseilles, but the Emperor changed his mind then, and the tent has lain ever since in the dag-room of the Tuileries. But, what is curious, the bed, the tent, the table, the toilet furniture, and the table service in silver, belonged to the first Emperor, and accompanied him in nearly all his campaigns; and the impression were so many victories Louis Napoleon is going to throw himself upon the destiny of these victorious wash-basins and saucepans. He begins, on the fields of Marengo and Lodi, to sleep upon, and draw inspiration from, the same bed on which dreamed and achieved his great uncle, and on which he planned the great battles that have made the name of Bonaparte so illustrious. As a superstition, there are more absurd ones than this of Louis Napoleon.

A SECULAR PROPHECY.—The following curious paragraph is from the Cologne correspondent of the Continental Review: "We may now afford to smile at the singular prophecy of the West-Indian Archbishop, who lived upon hundred and fifty years ago, and who predicted a terrible European war, in the course of which the Turks should drive the feet of their horses in the Rhine." These things—the runs the tradition—were to come to pass when carriages ran without horses, and the Prussian soldiers were dressed like the soldiers who recorded Christ. Carriages do run without horses, and the uniforms of a Prussian soldier, is a basin and helmet, he is still remarkable for a Roman beginning. But the superstitious, who speculated on this singular prophecy, could never reconcile with it the decline of the Turkish power, and the probability of the feet of the Sultan's troops carrying the standard of the Prophet to the banks of the Rhine. They forgot that France has Algerine regiments of Spahis and Zouaves, and that many of them are as good Mussulmans as ever walked the streets of Stambool.

The Emperor of Austria has sent an autograph letter to the Pope, assuring him of his sincerness to serve him, and begging his Holiness to discuss of him and of his troops. He adds that they shall retire, or limit their occupation to such places as the Pope may point out in order to defend the integrity of the territory of the Church.

OHIO WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS.

Announcement of the Proprietor for the Season of 1859.

THE OHIO & WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS

ARE situated in Delaware county, 10 miles north from Columbus, the capital of Ohio on the Scioto river, 10 miles from Delaware, 6 miles from the Ohio Sulphur Springs, 4 miles from the Spring Station, 1 mile from R. R., and 10 miles from Prospect Valley or Springfield, on the Columbus, Piqua & Indiana Railroad. These Springs will open for the reception of visitors

ON THE 1st DAY OF JUNE.

The proprietor of these springs have spared no pains, nor expense in the improvement of the Springs, adding the following improvements:

THE WHITE SULPHUR

is a beautiful American fountain, issuing from near the very brink of the Scioto river. At the depth of 180 feet below the level of the Scioto, flows the remarkable stream of sulphur water which supplies this spring. This stream was discovered some thirty years ago, by a gentleman who was boring for salt. The borer, when reached, at once arose to the surface, and has ever since continued to flow, during all seasons, with no change in volume, either in quality or volume.

THE MEDICINAL PROPERTIES.

For years these springs have been highly esteemed for their medicinal properties. During the past season their reputation in this respect has been singularly vindicated. They are administered by a physician, sufficiently to insure a regular course of drinking, sufficiently to show that this systematic plan the cures were numerous and gratifying.

THE WHITE SULPHUR WATER

is peculiarly serviceable in those disorders of the Liver and Stomach, which so often baffle guaiacum, who have been too closely confined to business, and persons of sedentary habits.

THE CHALYBEATE SPRINGS

are permanent beauty. These effects upon broken-down and debilitated constitutions have been so marked and manifest, giving to the Scioto a new vitality, and to the person new life and vigor.

THE MAGNESIAN WATER

is a gentle operator.

Benefits may be hoped for upon every facility for testing them which can contribute to their health and comfort.

As a delightful resort during the summer months, the Ohio White Sulphur Springs have risen in the West, and may now in the United States. The location is peculiarly healthy; the beautiful grove, which covers the valley, the "Cliff Limestone," a formation hundreds of feet in thickness, through which the river cuts its way, in every where at or near the surface; the grounds on the ground are beautifully embellished, and interspersed with numerous cottages, which, upon a call, are been employed, thus rendering the sulphur and the atmosphere free from that humidity so prejudicial to health; these circumstances taken in connection with the altitude of the place, about 1000 feet above the level of the ocean, make the health as free from malarious influences as any portion of the Union.

The spring property consists of 320 acres of land, one hundred of which is covered by one of the most beautiful groves in Ohio. The enclosed is between 3 and 4 miles within and drives, one of the latter being two miles in extent.

BATHS.

Bathing here is the plan adopted, is brought into fair competition with that of intensely warmed bathrooms. The water is heated in the bath tub by steam pipes; the heat not being raised high enough to discharge the bather, without the loss of the saline impregnation.

TELEGRAPH OFFICE.

A telegraph office, communicating with all parts of the country, has been established for the convenience of the visitors. Upon this distant points, will be a great convenience to gentlemen, who can hear from and direct their business affairs daily.

All the accessories necessary to health, pleasure and amusement, visitors may expect to find at the Ohio White Sulphur Springs, as the proprietor is determined to make it the most delightful of all the watering places. Gratified with the liberal patronage extended last year, no effort will be wanting to merit a continuance of it.

A livery stock stocked with horses and carriages, is attached to the springs.
