TRUTH AND FALSEHOOD.

TRUTH.

O child of heaven, mighty truth!
More precious than Ophir's gold,
Principled with eternal youth,
Thy loveliness will never grow old.

Pure as the crystal streams that flow,
Within the world of endless light!
Bright as the sunshine ever shall glow,
Or light by the river of sight.

Firm as the ocean-repelling rock,
With a foundation ever sure!
Whose form the angry billows mock,
While upon and then will endure.

Mightier than thrones and kingly sway,
Martyrs for thee have bled and died
Encouraged by the precious word
Thousands have died triumphantly dying.

To truth then, then in vain may strive,
Satan and all his host assail;
Thy power will forever live,
Truth mighty is, and must prevail.

FALSEHOOD.

Hither Summer from the shades of death
Out of the sable robes of night,
With baited form and poison breath
Spreading a mantle of darkness and night!

Companion of the brazen foot,
The seen Apollyon for their sake
Of nations and the fields who pour,
Through earth to spread destruction dire.

Thou guise of hypocrites who wear,
At night's face and serpent's heart;
Whose flattery lead down to perdition,
Whose words are like a cruel dart.

"What shall be done to thee, false tongue!
Sharp arrows of the mighty man;
And coals of juniper shall be poured
And fit will you life's narrow span.

In the dark realms of restless night,
Shall thy unending portion be;
With all who hate and shun the light,
To dwell throughout eternity.

JENNIE S.

NEAR PURDY, TENN., June 16, 1859.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH ON THE WAR IN ITALY.

Two public meetings were held in Cheltenham on Thursday, June 2, for the purpose of forming a volunteer rifle corps, one taking place in the afternoon and the other in the evening. The latter was called in favor of those tradesmen, shop assistants and others who could not be present in the middle of the day. The Earl of Ellenborough presided, and, the meeting being large, the proceedings were of an enthusiastic and satisfactory character.

The Earl of Ellenborough, who was loudly cheered, expressed his gratification at being able to comply with the request made to him to preside that evening, and at the same time he was pleased to observe so large an attendance. If there were tradesmen present, and he supposed there were, they, in his opinion, were especially interested in preventing an enemy landing on these shores, as being likely to suffer from such an occurrence. All monetary transactions of the country would be altogether impaired and injured from the very instant it was known an enemy had landed. What would be the effect of that panic occasioned by the approach of such an enemy to London, and what could be the mode of conducting monetary transactions with the means of communication interrupted, with the country, he did not pretend to say; but enough to feel satisfied that if the enemy landed we should be enabled to repel him; we must be so strong as to deter him from attempting invasion. (Cheers.) They might depend upon it that the mere act of invasion, if the enemy were here a week in the country and it terminated by his expulsion, or the destruction of his forces, that single week of invasion would produce an injury to the material interests of this country which a hundred years would hardly recover. (Hear, hear.) He dared say there were a good many among them who thought it possible to avoid all these calamities by preserving a strict neutrality. There could be no one more desirous than himself that we should not be involved in war. (Hear, hear.) But he would tell them that, that neutrality, although it put off war, it did not prevent it. (Hear, hear.)

On the contrary, it might ultimately bring upon us a war infinitely more dangerous than that in which we refused to engage before. While two great nations were contending against each other, if we engaged in a war, at least we should have one of those nations with us; if we waited till one of these nations was trampled upon and beaten by the other, and had deprived it of strength to contend in the field, and then we were disposed to contend against the conqueror, we should contend alone against a Power which had matured its forces, and perfected a force disciplined in the field, and therefore to our disadvantage. He knew not that it was necessary for him, if he were to speak at all, to say anything of the nature and character of the present; but there was one point connected with it about which he hoped they were under no delusion. He trusted they did not suppose that we were really a war for the independence of Italy. (Cheers.) If he could think it were so no one would rejoice in its success more than he should. (Renewed Cheers.) He had been constantly desirous of seeing a great and really independent state in Italy from the earliest period of his life. (Hear, hear.) No event would more strongly conduce to the security of Austria herself than the creation of a great and independent power in Italy. (Hear, hear.) He had not the smallest hope of any good result from any interference on the part of France. The object of France was to transfer to herself that supremacy in Italy which had been possessed by Austria since 1814. (Hear, hear.) Austria had held it for defensive purposes, France would hold it for the purpose of offense, and in her hands it would be an important step towards making the Mediterranean a French lake. (Hear, hear.) If they looked back to past times, and the wars of the French revolution, they would see with what gallantry Austria came forward, and what advantages we derived from her assistance. In 1805 Austria, at her own great risk, rushed forward and prevented the invasion of this country. (Cheers.)

In 1809 she again moved forward, she again suffered great defeats, but she facilitated by her movements the advance of the Duke of Wellington on Madrid, and laid the foundation of the liberation of Spain. Notwithstanding all these defeats of 1805 and 1809, and her weakness, Austria again in 1813 joined the allies, gave into their hands her territory of Bohemia for the purpose of enabling them to act against the French, and mainly contributed to Germany, and afterward to France, to the liberation of Europe. (Cheers.) We must not, therefore, allow ourselves to be diverted from the recollection of past times in dealing with the present. We would not go into any other point of great importance, and well worthy the attention of the public; he meant the understanding which existed between Prussia, Russia and France—[hear, hear,]—an understanding existing between two great despotic military powers with reference to what their conduct shall be in supporting the independence and freedom of Italy. There was reason, he believed, to suspect the purity of the motives of both parties—[hear, hear,]—but this fear might observe, while France, bringing 150,000 men on the frontiers of Poland, practically paralyzed Germany; we likewise, in the movement of our fleet, were already if not paralyzed yet greatly checked and controlled by the presence of a Russian fleet of thirty sail of the line, which had been largely increased since the commencement of this war, for we could not venture to send the whole of our force to the Mediterranean, knowing, if we did, that that fleet might anchor at Spithead. Yet we were told that Russia had assured the English Government that there was nothing whatever existing between France and herself connected with Italy, and that they accepted that explanation. If the government was not afraid of an understanding between Russia and France, it the more behooved the people of this country to be afraid, and to take their own course for their deliverance [Loud cheering.]

His lordship resumed his seat amid loud cheering, and a vote of thanks was given by acclamation.

The African Slave Trade.

Remarks of the Secretary of the Interior at Raleigh.

From the Constitution.]

The observations attributed to the Hon. Jacob Thompson in notices of his recent brief speech at Raleigh have excited a good deal of comment, especially in regard to disunionists, North and South, and the reopening of the African slave trade. Much interest has consequently been awakened to know what was actually said. The sketch first given in the southern papers being necessarily meagre, we deem it but just to the Secretary now to present more fully that portion of his remarks wherein he alluded to subjects in question. It will be seen that he spoke of the movement in his own State with as much plainness and directness as he used in commenting on the disunion dogma of the North:

The President (said Mr. Thompson) has referred in appropriate terms to the steadiness and uniformity with which North Carolina has ever maintained the Union of the States. While I respond to this sentiment, I must also refer to her temperate firmness in maintaining the rights of the South in their full integrity. In true devotion to the Union, I am fully consistent with an unflinching advocacy of every right secured to the South by the Constitution.

But I hope I will not offend if I bring your attention to the peculiar phase of public politics as there are now presented for public discussion. The era for practical questions seems to have passed. This may be regretted by some as the era of exciting speculative politics.—Practical questions no longer excite, no longer produce a sensation; speculative theories have taken their place, and we are called upon to take our position upon them. A leading politician of the North, who is regarded a great prophet of a great northern party, announces the political dogma that there can be no permanent conflict between the institutions of the North and South; that the Union cannot continue with the continued existence of both; that the one or the other must yield; that the Constitution adopted by our fathers is insufficient to secure the right, happiness, and prosperity of all. In plain words, this Union is a failure; and he is for revolution or disunion. I regard him and his party as disunionists—disunionists per se—because his theory can never be reduced to practice without leading to this inevitable result. We will discard this theory with unanimous voice.

There is also another speculative question arising in an opposite direction. In my own State another class of restless reformers has started a movement which demands the reopening of the foreign slave trade. Laws which were passed fifty years ago, at the urgent instance of the southern States, prohibiting the slave trade, have been declared to be unconstitutional and their longer continuance on the statute-book is destructive of the progress and prosperity of the South. In the advocacy of this new theory some able men have enlisted; but I do not believe there is one among them who believes the ends he aims at can ever be accomplished while the Union lasts; and God forbid that a movement fraught with such unnumbered curses upon the South should ever succeed! But suppose the demand is made upon Congress to reopen the slave trade, and Congress should refuse to yield to the demand, shall the South, taking fire at the refusal, strike for disunion? No, we shall oppose the reopening of the foreign slave trade, in the Union or out of it; and when that movement is made, which I fear not, you may take your stand and oppose, I will rally under that flag. In North Carolina, in that day, I do not believe there will be any division.

THE NEWS FROM MEXICO.

From the Washington Constitution.]

No one can rise from the perusal of the intelligence from Mexico without an increased feeling of confidence in the triumph of the Liberal cause. We do not refer, only, to the evidences of the encouragement which the Liberals manifestly entertain—and with great reason—on account of the jealousies, animosities, and open hostilities that had arisen among their enemies in the city of Mexico. Their dissensions, exasperated on the one side by the Church, and on the other by political and military ambition, have all the characteristics now of a quarrel in which two wildcats are tearing each other to pieces. But this is not all. The Liberals feel so strong in the moral influence which the recognition of the government of Juarez by the United States gives, that they go on with that buoyancy which springs from the consciousness of being engaged in a cause that cannot fail to constitute the reputation and the sympathies of the friends of freedom in every part of the world.

The vulgar insolence and inhuman cruelties of the enemies of the Liberal government—their atrocities upon defenseless women who hesitated to reveal hidden treasures belonging to their husbands, brothers, or friends—have never exceeded in the most uncivilized age, and in the most barbarous countries.

There is reason to believe that Americans have suffered grievously not only in their feelings, but in outrages on their personal rights, and in loss of time and consequent injury to their property or their business, from the one side or other.

There is no other government on the face of the earth, represented in Mexico, which does not possess the power to prevent, or prompt to punish, such outrages and insultings; or even insults and violations of etiquette. Had Congress complied with the courteous request of the President, and provided, with the utmost moderate means he asked for, our fellow-citizens there would have been much better off. These indecorums and insults, injuries and outrages—losses of time, money and property—would never have occurred.

It is stated that the Tehuantepec route is to receive a visitation from the bandits who displayed their prowess in stopping women. Let them try and carry out their course of barbarity, rapine and plunder there, and they will quickly find a check! Let them attempt rape and plunder, in any form, and they will be stopped.

But what does all this Mexican news illustrate, except that the President was right in the sagacious and far-seeing views on which his recommendation to Congress was founded?

Impartial history, the judgment of all contemporaries at home, and the verdict of governments and nations abroad, will sufficiently vindicate the whole policy of President Buchanan in regard to Mexico.

SYNOPSIS

OF THE

President's Proclamation

No. 637, dated March 22, 1859.

IT orders public sales in the Territory of Nebraska, as follows:

At the Land Office at Brownsville, on the 5th of August, 1859, at 10 o'clock, for the sale of portions of the Indian reservations of Sillaquatch, Nemaha, Johnson, and Pottawattamie.

At the same place, on the 5th of September, 1859, of thirty-three township and parts of townships in the Pottawattamie and Omaha Indian reservations.

At the Land Office at Nebraska City, on the 1st of November, 1859, of the remaining portions of the Omaha and Pottawattamie reservations, and of those in the counties of Otoe, Lancaster and Cedar.

At the Land Office at Omaha City, on the 5th of July, 1859, of forty-one townships and parts of townships in the counties of Dakota, Cuming, Burt, Washington, and Dodge.

At the same place, on the 26th of July, 1859, of thirty-three townships and parts of townships in the counties of Burt, Cavendish, and Dodge.

At the Land Office at Dakota City, on the 19th of July, 1859, of twenty-four townships in the counties of Dakota and Cedar.

The lands will be offered with the usual exceptions of school sections, etc., etc.

The sales will be kept open until the lands are all offered, which is to be accomplished within two weeks, and no longer; and no private entry of any of the lands will be allowed prior to the expiration of the two weeks.

Pre-emption claimants are required to establish their claims to the satisfaction of the proper registers and receivers on or before the day fixed for the commencement of the public sale, or they will be considered as waived, and the land will be subjected to sale as above.

THOS. A. HENDRICKS,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

KINCHEN'S VEGETABLE ALTERATIVE AND STOP SARSAPARILLA

THOMAS FULLER

WHOLESALE DRUGGIST

203 FULTON ST. N.Y.

A PURIFIER of the Blood, and certain cure for Spinal Affection of Kidneys, Liver, Bladder, Skin Diseases, Weak Back, Rheumatism, Gravel, Dropsy, Costiveness, Dysentery, Diseases of the Kidneys and Spine, Cutaneous Eruptions, Scald Head, Sore Throat, Scurvy, Chronic or Mercurial Rheumatism, Ulcerated Sore Legs, Ulcerated Throat, Debility, Leucorrhœa or Whites, Female Weakness, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Costiveness or Habitual Fevers, Ague and Fever, Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Nervous Debility.

The Vegetable Alterative is offered to the public as a remedy for the above named diseases, or any other, or in part from impurity or vitiation of the blood—the basis of its curative force rests upon the well known alterative properties of the Sarsaparilla, which is the active agent in the composition of this medicine in all its parts. This Alterative, with the addition of other medicinal plants—alterative and tonic in their nature—combined, form a compound which is adapted to the most delicate form, stamina or the constitution even of the most alterative sensitive ever cast. It is mild, yet active in its operation, and may be used by all with confidence and safety.

It is an Alterative Tonic, and is peculiarly adapted to scrofula and other diseases of the blood, and to all those attacks of severe or protracted cases of mercurial disease, or the injudicious use of the Mercurial Alterative, or any one who has never failed to restore the health to health, strength and vigor of their constitutions.

In diseases arising from an improvement of mercury or other mineral medicines, it is invaluable as the chosen agent of nature in which it is adapted to expel mercury from the blood and slumber system.

In all cases of Scrofula, Cancer, Ulcers, Tetter and all such diseases as Scald Head, Salt Rheum, and Skin Diseases, it has been proved to be without a rival in its powerful effects.

In the combination there are remedies that act directly on the Liver and Kidneys, and thereby it proposes to relieve those organs when in a torpid or inactive state. It relieves the pain and uneasiness in the back, which is of the blood, it claims to be a cure for that troublesome disease generally.

The Alterative is put up in pint bottles. Alternately two bottles in a package, each containing half a pint, and directed to the general diseases, which it claims to be a cure for.

All agents and others who have the Alterative for sale are supplied with three pamphlets to distribute, AS MANY AS THEY WANT.

This medicine has been extensively used by many druggists and others, and has given universal satisfaction. Many letters from many of them, speaking of the benefits of the Alterative, are in possession of the proprietor, which he offers for inspection. We are at liberty to refer to Dr. Kline, of Lexington; R. Old, Dr. Ward, of Petersburg, Va.; Dr. Wilson, of Natchez, Mississippi, Prince Bros., Richmond, Va.; Dr. Ward, New York; Dr. C. A. REAL ESTATE.

PURSUANT to a decree of the Chancery Court of Memphis, at its April Term, 1859, in the case of Rhodes & Williams vs. Jas. Coffin, Jr., et al., I will, on the premises, on THURSDAY, the 7th day of JULY, 1859, at 10 o'clock, A. M., sell to the highest bidder, for cash, the following tract of land, lying in the city of Memphis, in the Pigeon Roost Ferry Road, commencing at a point on the south line of Jefferson street, thence south 300 feet, thence west 100 feet, thence north 300 feet, thence east 100 feet to the beginning.

A TRACT OF LAND,

Containing about seventy acres, which will be laid off into small lots, and offered for sale at the same time, and on the same terms as the above property.

TERMS OF SALE—A credit of six months with one thousand dollars of the purchase money to be paid in cash, and the balance in two equal payments of one year and two years, with interest from the day of sale; the purchaser giving bond and two good sureties, with the title to the land retained for the payment of the purchase money.

JOHN C. WIDRIG,
Master Commissioner.
