COTTON MANUFACTURE AND CULTURE.

The development both of the production and the manufacture of cotton has been without a parallel in the history of any human industry. Two hundred years have scarcely elapsed since cotton manufacture is first mentioned in history, and then it was as small as to possess no importance. Indeed, but ninety years have passed since goods were first manufactured from cotton alone, and then it was the work of the hand—the yarn being spun and the cloth woven in the dwellings of cottagers.

Arkwright's genius gave cotton manufacture the importance it now possesses, making it the stay of British power and a benefaction to the human race. From the year 1800, we may trace the real importance of this species of human industry—an industry which has expanded with a rapidity and to an extent, that renders the contrast of years within the comprehension of a human life, truly astonishing. In 1775, the importation of cotton into England for the consumption of its factories, was only 4,764,589 pounds; in 1837 it had risen to 1,023,800,925 pounds, an increase in eighty-two years, of 1,018,121,949 pounds.

In view of the rapid progress of cotton manufacture we are at a loss what limit to place to the growth of this species of industry. Cotton cloth is some of its varieties has come to be the common clothing of the world. The cheaper fabric has produced the more extensive its consumption. The extension of human intercourse and the enlargement of the fields of commerce upon new and rapidly increasing population. But the limit must at last be reached.

The rapidity of the increase in the production of the raw material has quite equaled the extension of its manufacture. Prior to the 1760 we exported no cotton. It was not a staple product of any State; nor was any export when placed upon it a future source of wealth.

But as the invention of Arkwright endowed the cotton weaver with new powers, and built up manufacturing industry to its present inconceivable value, so that of Whitney gave new energy to our agriculturists, and made the cotton growing States the arbiters of the world of commerce. In sixty years the export of this great staple has risen from nothing to 3,700,000 bales. With unumbered acres of cotton lands, needing only the hand of toil to make them fruitful, where do the powers of production end?

Though the capacity of the United States to furnish a supply of raw cotton for the world is unlimited, yet the influences tending the capacity of every island and intertropical region to find new fields for its culture.

If they succeed in rendering a supply so as temporarily to be independent of the United States? If industry and indefatigable effort, regardless of expense and unforeseen and by fortune, can succeed, they will ultimately triumph. But, confident in the necessity of social institutions similar to our own to secure the profitable culture of cotton on a large scale, the planting interest of the cotton States regards their efforts with supreme indifference. We believe, in our day at least, unless we accept a position, that in the vicissitude of this great staple, we have nothing to fear.

We are by no means certain, under other circumstances than those of the last year, to the direction may not be so stimulated in the United States, as to glut the market, and diminish the present profits of this great industry. Under the influence of present prices, the cultivation of cotton is now extended to the full capacity of planters to hire additional labor. The coming crop may show a large increase upon that of the past. At what point of production the supply shall so largely exceed the demand as to produce a decided reaction, it is impossible to decide.

For the last quarter, a decided falling off in the sales of cotton manufactures has been experienced in England. This may continue. The power to manufacture has certainly not been decreased, but the means of several nations of Europe to buy have been suddenly curtailed. Poverty follows in the train of war. And its waste is now felt in all the nations who have been compelled, by a State necessity to mobilize their armies.

Not less serious upon the power to be profitable consumers of cotton goods has been the interception in India. We shall not be surprised, therefore, to witness a decline in the amount of cotton the ensuing year, if not years, to be followed, perhaps, by an expansion in the future.

The possibility of overproduction of the raw material, especially when the fact of considerable increase in the exports of cotton is witnessed from Egypt, from South America, from the West India Islands, the Pacific Islands, and Southern Africa, is not to be denied, and it becomes the policy of the cotton planters to guard against this result as energetically as the Manchester Association labors to increase the sources from which it may be obtained.

Millions of men depend for their prosperity—nay, their comfort—upon preserving the present relations as nearly as possible between the supply and demand of this great staple. As a failure of production to keep the mills in action would revolutionize the commercial world of Europe, so a surplus, sufficient to reduce the price to the mere cost of production, would annihilate millions upon millions of value in this country, by throwing down the price of every species of its property.

Industry which has exhibited such remarkable expansion, and is easily capable of almost unlimited growth, as that of cotton culture, must have a limit somewhere. It is not the policy of the South to find this limit, in order to enrich others and forestall or preclude political advantage.—N. O. Picayune.

DALY'S
AROMATIC VALLEY WHISKY!
For Medical Use.

HAS taken that position in the world's estimation, which justifies the Proprietor in claiming for it

A SUPERIORITY UNRIVALED.

Produced, as it is, by a process known only to the manufacturer, and extracted from the choicest grain, which proves to be unlike all the Whiskies in the Valleys of the Monongahela, and containing no particle of deleterious substance; it is now offered to the public as the purest purity and extreme excellence, based solely upon its intrinsic merit, which the Proprietor does not intend, or, indeed, as he is a practical manufacturer, shall ever be induced, or in any manner allowed to impeach the correctness of the statements of the learned and whose certificates we publish herewith.

He does not intend to deceive the medical public, by advertisement, the

EXTRAORDINARY MEDICINAL PROPERTIES

which have been imputed to it, but he does claim that its efficacy as a medicinal stimulant should insure its name with advertising importunities, and the unusual tedious of quotations, but, for some time past, the proprietor has been in the position of being unable to gratify medical testimonials from all parts of the country, consisting

and testimonials which speak with such emphatic and unqualified approval of the merited position of the

MEDICAL AGENT

It will in no instance attempt to substitute the whiskies in order to relieve, repair or assist the functions and offices of the stomach, liver, and kidneys, but even at the hazard of which he has spoken, is made known to the world, in the hope that medical practitioners, from extraordinary and invaluable properties of this article, of his manufacture

It is not to be supposed that the proprietor knows himself to be justified in claiming for his manufacture Brandy or Whiskey, the qualities which cannot be attributed to any other, which cannot be attributed to any other, which cannot be attributed to any other,
