Daily Appeal.

THE SACRIFICE.

"There, Mary—now don't you think I deserve to be called a pretty good husband?" laughed the young man as he dropped down in the lady's palm half a dozen gold pieces.

"Yes, you are, Edward, the very best husband in the world," and she lifted up her sweet face, beaming with smiles as a June morning with sunshine.

"Thank you, thank you, for the very flattering words. And now, dear, I want you to have the cloak by next Christmas. I am anxious to see how you will look in it."

"But, Edward," gazing steadily, into the shining pieces in her rosy palm, "you know we are not rich people, and it really seems a piece of extravagance for me to give thirty dollars for a velvet cloak."

"No, it is not, either. You deserve the cloak, Mary, and I've set my mind upon having it. Then it'll last you so many years, that it will be more economical in the end than a less expensive article."

It was evident the lady was predisposed to conviction. She made no further attempt to refute her husband's arguments, and her small fingers closed over the gold pieces, as she rose up, saying:

"Well, dear, the supper has been waiting half an hour, and I know you must be hungry."

Edward and Mary Clark were the husband and wife of a year. He was a book-keeper in a large establishment, with a salary of fifteen hundred dollars. His fair young wife made a little earthly paradise of her humble home in the suburbs of the city, for within its walls dwell two lives that were set like music to poetry, keeping time to each other. And dwelt, also, the peace which God giveth those who love Him.

Mrs. Clark came into the room suddenly, and the girl lifted her head, and then turned it away quickly, but not till the first glance to the lady that the fair face was swollen and stained with tears.

Janet Hill was a young seamstress whom Mrs. Clark had occasionally employed for the last six months. She was always attended by her young, bright face, her modest yet dignified manner, and the lady saw at once that some great sorrow had smitten the girl.

Obeying the prompings of a warm, impressive heart, she went to her and laid her hand on her arm, saying softly:

"Won't you tell me what is troubling you, Janet?"

"Nothing that anybody can help," answered the girl, trying still to avert her face, while the tears swelled in her eyes from the effort she made to speak.

"But perhaps I can. At any rate, you know, it does us good sometimes to confide our sorrows to a friend, and I need not assure you that I sincerely grieve because of your distress."

And so, with kind words and half-caressing movements of the little hand, laid on the seamstress' arm, Mrs. Clark drew from her lips her sad story.

She was an orphan, maintaining herself by her daily labors, and she had one brother, just sixteen, three years her junior. He had been for some time a kind of under clerk in a large wholesale establishment, where there was every prospect of promotion, but he had seriously injured himself in the manner by lifting some heavy bales of goods, and at last a dangerous fever set in, which had finally left him so exhausted a state that the doctor had no hope of his recovery.

"And to think that I shall never see him again, Mrs. Clark," cried the poor girl, with a fresh burst of tears. To think he must die, away there among strangers in the hospital, with no loving face there to bend over him in his last hours, or brush away the damp curls from the forehead which Mamma used to be so proud of. Oh, George—my darling, my bright-faced little brother, George," and here the poor girl broke down in a storm of sobs and tears.

"Poor child, poor child!" murmured Mrs. Clark, her sweet eyes swimming with tears. "How much would it take to see you to your brother, and return?" she asked at last.

"About thirty dollars. I have not so much money in the world. You see it is nearly four hundred miles off; but I could manage to support myself after I got there."

A thought passed quickly through Mrs. Clark's mind. She stood still a few moments, her blue eyes fixed in deep meditation. At last she said kindly:

"Well, my child, try to bear up bravely, and we will see what can be done for you;" and the warm, cheerful tones comforted the sad heart of the seamstress.

The lady went up stairs and took the pieces out of her ivory port monnaie. There was a brief struggle in her mind. "Somehow I felt set my heart on this velvet cloak," she thought, "and Edward will be disappointed. I was going out to select the velvet this very afternoon. But then, there's that dying boy, lying there with strange faces about him, and longing, as the slow hours go by, for the sight of the sister who loves him, and would not this thought haunt me every time I put on my new cloak?" After all, any old broadcloth is not so bad, if it is only turned. And, I am sure, I can bring Edward over to my way of thinking. No you must go without the cloak this time, and have the pleasure of knowing you've smoothed the path going down to the valley of the shadow of death, Mary Clark." And she closed the port monnaie resolutely, and went down stairs.

"Janet, put up your work this moment—there is no time to be lost. Here is the money. Take it and go to your brother."

The girl lifted her eyes a moment, almost in bewilderment, to the lady, and then as she comprehended the truth, a cry of such joy broke from her lips, that its memory never faded from the heart through all the after years of Mrs. Clark's life.

"George! George!" The words leaped from her lips, as she sprang forward to the low bed where the youth lay, his white, sharpened face gleaming deathlike from amidst his thick yellow curls.

He opened his large eyes suddenly—a flush passed over his pallid face. He stretched out his thin arms, exclaiming, "O, Janet! Janet! I have prayed God for the sight of you once more before I died!"

"His pulse is stronger than it has been for two weeks, and his face has a better hue," said the doctor, a few hours later, as he made his morning visit through the wards of the hospital.

"His sister came yesterday and watched with him," answered an attendant, glancing at the young girl who hung breathless over the sleeping invalid.

"Ah, that explains it. I'm not certain but that young man has recuperative power enough left to recover, if he should have the care and tenderness, for the next two months, which love alone can furnish."

How Janet's heart leaped at the very words. That very evening she had interceded with her brother's employers. They had been careless, but not intentionally unkind, and the story enlisted their sympathies.

In a day or two, George was removed to a quiet, comfortable private home, and his sister installed herself by his couch, his nurse and comforter.

Three years have passed. The shadows of the night were drooping already around. Mrs. Clark sat in her chamber humming a nursery tune, to which the cradle kept a sort of rhythmic movement. Sometimes she would pause suddenly and adjust the snowy blankets around the cheeks of the little slumberer, shining out from the bright curls as red apples shine amid fading leaves in October weather. Suddenly the door opened. "Sh—sh," said the young mother, and she lifted her finger with a smile of warning as her husband entered.

"There's something for you, Mary. It cause by express this afternoon; he said the words in an undertone, placing a small package in her lap.

The lady removed the covers with eyes filled with wonder, while her husband leaned over her shoulder and watched her movements.

A white box disclosed itself, and removing the cover, Mrs. Clark descried a small, elegantly-chased hunting watch. She lifted it with a cry of delightful surprise, and touching the spring the case flew back, and on the inside was engraved these words:

"To Mrs. Mary Clark. In token of the life she saved."

"O, Edward, it must have come from George and Janet Hill," exclaimed the lady, and the quick tears leaped into her eyes. "You know she's been with him ever since that time, and she wrote me, last spring, that he had obtained an excellent situation as head clerk in the firm. What an excellent gift, and how I shall value it. Not simply for itself, but for—"

"Well, Mary, you were in the right, then, though I'm sorry to say I was half vexed with you for giving up your velvet cloak, and you have scolded me."

"No, I have not had one, but I never regretted it."

She said the words with her eyes fastened upon him.

"Nor I, Mary, for I cannot doubt that your sacrifice bought the young man's life."

"Oh, say those words again, Edward. Blessed be God for them," added the lady fervently.

The husband drew his arm around his wife and murmured reverently,

"Blessed be God, Mary, who put it into your heart to do this good deed."

The London Times on Free Negroes.

In presenting the following extracts from an article in the London Times, we do not claim for them any importance at all as an expression of opinion. That newspaper scorns to have opinions. But we have here at all events admissions from a most hostile quarter; admissions not prompted by honest convictions indeed, but by the mere cotton instinct and the conscience of a grocer:

There is no blinking the truth. Years of bitter experience—years of hope deferred, of self-devotion unrequited, of generous, of humiliations, of prayers unanswered, of sufferings derided, of insults unresented, of contumely patiently endured—have convinced us of the truth. It must be spoken out, loudly and emphatically, despite the wild mockings of "howling cant." The free West India negro slave will not till the soil for wages; the free negro of an adjacent island prefers to steal. We will cultivate lands which he has not bought for his own yams, mangoes, and plantains. These satisfy his wants; he does not care for yours. Cotton and sugar and coffee and tobacco—he cares little for them. And what matters it to him that the Englishman has sunk his thousands and tens of thousands on mills, machinery, and plant, which now lie idle on the languishing estate that for years has only returned beggary and debts. He eats his yams and sniggers at "Buckra."

We know not why this should be; but it is so. The negro has been bought with a price, the price of English taxation and English toil. He has been "redeemed from bondage" by the sweat and travail of some millions of harder working Englishmen. Twenty millions of pounds sterling—one hundred millions of dollars—have distilled from the brains and muscles of the free English laborer, of every degree, to fashion the West Indian negro into a "free and independent laborer." "Free and independent" enough he has become, God knows, but laborer he is not; and, so far as we can see, he never will be. He will sing hymns and quote texts, but honest, steady industry he not only detests but despises. We will go to Heaven that some people in England—neither government, people, nor parsons, nor clergymen—but some just-minded, honest-hearted and clear-sighted men, would go out to some of the islands—say Jamaica, Dominica, or Antigua, not for a month or three months, but for a year—would watch the precious pustes of English philanthropy, the freed negro, in his daily habits, would watch him as he lazily plants his little squatting; would see him as he proudly rejects agricultural or domestic service, or accepts it only at wages ludicrously inappropriate to the value of his work. We wish, too, they would watch him while, with a hide thicker than that of a hippopotamus, and a body to which fervid heat is a comfort rather than an annoyance, he drowsily lounges over the prescribed task on which the intrepid Englishman, uninured to the burning sun, consumes his impatient energy, and too often sacrifices his life. We wish they would go out and view the negro in all the blazonry of his idleness, his pride, his ingratitude, contemptuously sneering at the industry of that race which made him free, and then come home and teach the memorable lesson of their experience to the fanatics who have perverted him into what he is."

Educational.

Teachers Wanted,

TO take charge of the Masonic Female Institute, at Clinton, Hinds county, Miss., to open the first Monday in September 15th. None need apply without unquestionable testimonials of capacity to conduct a first class female school, to which a liberal salary will be given. A gentleman and lady preferred.

W. L. HARRIS, President of Board, Chairman.
J. J. HAYNES, Secretary.

Memphis Female College.

THIS INSTITUTION, chartered in 1854, was founded expressly to afford superior accommodations and the best facilities for the thorough education of young ladies. The oldest teachers are entered in all its departments. All the derivatives are in the third and fourth classes, and the pupils are classed according to their proficiency. Since the commencement of the session, the number of boarders from fifteen to twenty, has required the attention of a physician three times in one hour daily.

In order to secure situations, persons desiring to patronize the College, should make application before the beginning of the next session, which will be on the SECOND MONDAY IN SEPTEMBER.

For full particulars, apply to the President.

jy6-eod&w6m C. G. MACPHERSON, President.

FRANKLIN FEMALE COLLEGE,
Holly Springs, Miss.

REV. T. S. DOUGLASS, A. M.....President.
MISS J. DOUGLASS.....Lady Principal.

THIS INSTITUTION has been purchased by the undersigned, and will be reopened on MONDAY, the 12th of September next. A Board of Teachers fully equal to any in the southern states will be employed in the Literary, Scientific and Ornamental departments, and the best music teacher in the country will be employed.

Boarders, and a fill be supplied with furniture of the latest and neatest style. The long experience of the President in the management of one of the most flourishing schools in the country, (Marshall Female Institute,) will, they hope, secure for them a liberal patronage. Catalogues, with all information, will be sent, on application to me, or Mr. T. S. Douglas, Mgr.

MASONIC MALE ACADEMY,
North Mount Pleasant,
MARSHALL COUNTY, MISS.

THE Trustees of this Institution have succeeded in procuring the services of Mr. J. J. Steger, late of the Marshall Female Institute, to be associated with his son, D. W. Steger, A. B., to take charge of the Male Department, the duties of which he had been performing for the last session, and he feels assured that his course in generally and favorably known as a thorough educator, commends in regard to him any recommendation he may offer. They are prepared to give a thorough English, Mathematical and Classical education. Tuition in advance, and no tuition in the Primary Department. The Principal and Trustees are determined to spare no pains or expense in making this an Academy of a high grade.

North Mount Pleasant is a very healthy and moral village. The sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited within five miles of it. The first session will commence on the FIRST MONDAY in September next. For further information address the Principal or Secretary of the Board of Trustees.

BAILEY SPRINGS.

THE SECOND SEASON since the change of proprietors of this celebrated Watering Place is now open for the accommodation of visitors.

The Improvements.

A large number of comfortable family rooms have been added to the previous during the past Fall and Winter, which will assist the proprietors to satisfactorily undertake a work.

LARGER CROWD

than they were last season, the buildings all being large, new and comfy.

THE WATERS

Are over the same in quantity and quality, and are unsurpassed, if equaled, by any water in the world for the cure of

SCROFULA, DROPSY, DYSPEPSIA,
SORE EYES,
DISEASES OF THE KIDNEY,

AMUSEMENTS.

A good Band of Music will be on hand, and a large Ball Room will be fitted for those who may wish to enjoy the social dance. Besides good Bowling Alley and Billiard Saloons, a bar of fine Liquors, Tobacco, Cigars, Confectionaries, etc. The Sam Bates Band is coming, and Bailey is the sure drier water of Mount Creek; the fine roads and facilities for riding, all combine to make BAILEY'S one of the most pleasant places of

HORSEBACK AND BUGGY

SUMMER RESORT
IN THE SOUTH.

MEDICAL.

Drs. Crittenden & Stewart have entered on office at the Springs, where they will attend to all who may wish to attend calls, and perform all intricate and difficult operations in the surgical department of medicine.

The premises formerly occupied by visitors at this place have been appropriated as for invalids generally, and will be placed under the charge of a regular Hydropathic Physician, so that they are well provided for, and use the waters properly.

EDUCATIONAL.

A Lady of many years experience as Teacher and Governess in the best Schools and families in the South, and in every country in Europe, has a class here at this time, and will be prepared to take charge of all that may be entrusted to her care.

These Springs are accessible from the East, West, North and South by the Memphis and Charleston Railroad and its tributaries to Florence, Alabama, thence by Jacksboro Coaches nine miles to the Springs.

DALY'S
AROMATIC VALLEY WHISKY!
For Medical Use.

HAS now taken that position in the world's estimation, which facilities its Proprietor in claiming for it

A SUPERIORITY UNRIVALED,

Produced, as it is by a process known only to the manufacturer, and extracted from the choicest grain, which grows in where but in favored locality in the Valley of the Monongahela, and containing no particle of deleterious substance; it has acquired a reputation for perfect purity and intrinsic excellence, based solely upon its inherent merit, which the Proprietor does not intend to hedge he submits the manufacture, that very by forfeited, or in any manner allowed to impeach the correctness of the statements of the learned and whose certificates we publish herewith.

He has heretofore refrained from making public, by advertisement, the

which this article is known to possess, and this silence on his part has been construed by a sensitive great deal the guilelessness question should connect his name with advertising emporiums, and the numerous issues of quackeries from circulation. For some time past, the proprietor has been in the constant receipt of unsolicited testimonials from all quarters, of the most and testimonials which speak with such emphatic and unqualified approval of the unrivaled qualities of the

AROMATIC VALLEY WHISKY

AS A MEDICAL AGENT

in all cases in which artificial stimulation for bodily exhaustion, or nervous prostration, or debility, from whatever cause, and everyone a nature that he deems it his duty, even at the hazard of being thought egotistic, to make known to the world, is the most public manner possible, those extraordinary and invaluable properties of this article, of his manufacture.

It is not his purpose to ☞ in detail a list of those diseases of which it is a specific, but he will say that it is to be used literally attended to the use of this eliminated. They are particularly described in the various testimonials spoken of, which are open at all times to the inspection of our friends, but which we do not feel at liberty, without special permission of the distinguished persons who have sent them to us, to parade in the public newspapers.

Suffice it to say, that the diseases alluded to comprise all cases as are incident to

or to any other cause which disorganizes or impairs the general functions of the human system, inducing languor, lassitude and depression, and the multitudinous ills flowing from that source. In all such cases assisting the natural organs, by a stimulant which, both in quality and quantity, is adapted to the wants of system, and admirably fitted to re-invigorate and to call back that tone and force of action in the vital organs so essential to physical health.

It is to this subject that the proprietor knows himself to be justified in asserting for his Aromatic Valley Whiskey properties and virtues which cannot be overstated nor overvalued. Its universal use by the is most urgently recommended. Already it has found its way into the principal public and private hospitals in the country, and wherever it has been once used it forthwith has become a requisite.

I have analyzed a sample of "Daly's Aromatic Valley Whiskey," and find it to be a pure article, of the flavor, and without any deleterious ingredients.

WM. H. DALY, New York:

Your Aromatic Valley Whiskey is received, and, after careful analysis, I find it a pure, fine, and very delicately flavored whiskey, containing no deleterious ingredients, and so frequently used.

Yours, respectfully,

JAS. C. BAYNE, Analytical Chemist.

☞ Consumers can depend upon getting a pure article when they use the Valley Whiskey, as it is sold by the bottle and case only.
